Telecom rival to sue

By David Felton Labour Correspondent

Mercury Communications, the private enterprise company set up to compete with British Telecom, yesterday started logal action against the union which has been accused of organizing a campaign of "guerrilla" action designed to stop its operations. Writs were issued by the company on the Post Office Engineering Union and Mr Bryan Stanley, its General Secretary, under the Government of the Covernment of ment's employment legislation. They are likely to be heard in the High Court next week. The writs seek injunctions restraining the union from action in three areas. Those are: threatening to between Mercury and BT; interfering with the business of Mercury and so causing loss or damage to the company; and a request that the union rescind an instruction to its members not to cooperate with Mercury.

POEU officials attending the Labour Party conference in Brighton were tight lipped last night having been instructed by their solicitors to make no comment on the writs. There was also speculation last night that the union's left-wing executive would ignore the writs, at least in the first

The union's campaign, which was established by a special conference in mid-September, has been gimed at preventing the link-up between Mercury circuits and BT lines. The union has also been taking subsidiar/ action against the three sharcholders in Mercury - Barclays Bank, Cahle & Wireless and Paritish Petroleum.

A Mercury official said last night that the union's action was "seriously impeding" its business, and the POEU threat to black any future Mercury customers could also have a serious impact on the company.

Mercury was established after the Conservative government hroke the telecommunications monopoly held by BT. It has set up a new telephone network in London based on microwave links which have only a "handful" of customers at the moment, according to the company.

It hopes to have established a link between London and Birmingham by December, with a further connexion to Manchester in January. Its first international services should be established by summer of next vear. The POEU action has mainly involved strikes by small groups of key workers in the three sharebolding companies.

It is part of the union's overall policy of opposition to the Government's plans to sell off 51 per cent of its shares in BT. The Telecommunications Bill is likely to go into the committee stage in the Commons before the end of the Crittall Warmlife and Everest double-glazing companies.

The conclusion of the investitators was that there were areas for concern. Not all salesmen made the purpose of their call clear immediately; some might necessarily frue and some used such high-pressure sales methods that people were browbeaten into submission.

The association also quoted from a training manual from Zenith that, having established a customer needs and can afford double glazing, a representative is then "morally justified in using any pressure to make him sign the order . . . To make the customer say 'yes' it is often necessary to trick him into it."

Mr Michael King, marketing director for Crittall Warmlife, said he was sorry the association had felt it necessary to introduce "moles" into the sales courses. He said: "We have nothing to be ashamed of, they had only to ask and we would have answered any questions.

THE ONLY ABSOLUTE GUARANTEE YOUR MONEY WILL BE WORTH MORE IN AYEARS TIME

You can never be certain about future interest rates and future inflation. So it is difficult to predict what your savings will be worth a year from now.

Index-linking is the only way to guarantee the spending power of your savings.

And now with the new 2.4% supplement, Index-linked Savings Certificates again offer a unique guarantee - the spending power of your lump-sum savings will actually grow next year

How the supplements work

Keep the Certificates you hold on 31 October 1983 until 1 November 1984 and they will earn 2.4% of their October 1983 value, on top of the index-linked return. Tax-free.

This new 2.4% supplement for 1983-84 is in addition to the 2.4% pa supplement for 1982-83. If you qualify for the first supplement, don't cash in this November, but keep your Certificates for another year and you will earn both 2-4% supplements. Tax-free.

Once they have been earned, these supplements will also be index-linked.

Buy some more

By the end of October, Certificates which qualified for the first 2.4% supplement will have earned a tax-free return of 7% since last October, with inflation at 4.6%. For the following 12 months, index-linking plus the new supplement could give you another attractive tax-free return. So if you are buying some more, make sure you get them before the end of this month. You can then earn the new 2.4% supplement in full.

Five-year bonus

And don't forget, if you hold your Certificates for a full five years you get an added tax-free bonus of 4% of the purchase price.

Repayments are free of UK income tax at all levels (including investment income surcharge) and capital gains tax.

Guaranteed growth

Index-linked Savings Certificates offer you a completely risk-free investment, the only lumpsum investment with a guarantee that the spending

Labour is faced with dual disarmament policy

The Labour Party Conference at Brighton yesterday committed the party to the unconditional scrapping of all nuclear weapons systems, the cancellation of the Trident programme, the removal of all existing nuclear weapons and bases, includ-ing Polaris, from British soil and British waters and the rejection of

Two detailed motions oo defcoce policy were based on a new generation of nuclear weapons and the election manifesto assertion that unilateralism and multilateralism raust go hand in hand if either was

One of the motions, that moved by Mr Ronald Todd, national organizer of the Transport and General Workers' Union, demanded that in Labour's continuous campaigning and in the next election manifesto "we make it clear that a future Labour government will unconditionally scrap all uclear weapons systems".

The multilateralist approach to Arms race 'at most dangerous point'

The survival of the human race could not be left to a shouting match between Washington and Moscow with Mrs Thatcher shricking on the sidelines, Mr Denis Healey, retiring deputy leader of the party, and spokesman as foreign and commonwealth affairs, said when he opened the defence debute. In a strong attack on Mrs Margaret Thatcher's defence posture, Mr Healey was cheered as he nold the conference "The whole hasis on which the is torpedoing the (disarmament) talks is a tissue of Bes and she tries to distract attention from her dishonesty by a shrill harrage of anti-Soviet demagogy, which makes President Reagan look like a fellow travelier".

He invited the conference to approve unanimously, as the national executive committee had, a passage on peace and disarmament in the NEC statement "Campaign-ing for a fairer Britain". It duty did

That set out key insues in Labour's campaign on disarmament and defence: siting of cruise missiles should be stopped: the decision to purchase Trident should be cancelled: Britain's Polaria submarines should be included in current grass negotiations: that the party amet fight for a freeze on the testing, producition and deployment of naclear weapons: Tory plans to increase defeace smeading runst had of nuclear weapons: Tory plans to increase defeace spending must be opposed: and they must werk for a nuclear-free Europe and for the dismantling of foreign ouclear bases in Britain.

One was her claim that Polaris was in place before intermediate missiles. The Runslans had hun-

She constantly said that Polaris was a strategic weapon outside Nato. The Best evidence for the faisity of that statement came from the American Secretary of State for the American Secretary of State for the American Secretary of State for Defeace that Polaris was part of Nato, and not part of the West's strategic force. Job losses are 'social control by fear'

It contains an analysis of the

Correction

The elections to the National Executive Committee of the Labour Party, published yesterday, should have included, under Dryision I (trade unions), Mr Tony Clarke, of the Union of Communication Workers, not Mr Alan Clarke.

Much of the careful stitching together of the Labour Party, which has been a feature of the opening days of the conference, began to come undone in the defence debate yesterday.

Smith

This was not simply, or even principally, because of the votes taken. There were some contradictions between the national executive committee statement, which was approved by a large majority, and the resolutions which were passed and, in any case, Mr Neil Kinnock had indicated by his unsuccessful intervention at the NEC meeting on Sunday that he would prefer a free hand to develop a new policy

The NEC statement called for the inclusion of Polaris in the current arms negotiations, which implies that it would be renounced only if the Soviet Union made corresponding concessions. The statement also proclaimed that "we must work for a nuclear-free Europe, and for the dismantling of foreign nuclear bases in Bri-tain", without imposing any time limit

This did not carry, therefore. any commitment to get rid of American nuclear bases within the lifetime of a single parlia-ment. It would still be damag-ing if a future Labour government were to take office with such a policy because it would undermine the political stab-ility of Nato, But this statement is at least a considerable improvement on previous Labour policy and, if it has been approved by itself, would have provided a base for further adjustments in response to changing conditions, It was, however, accompanied by resolutions that confirmed, in the strongest possible terms. commitmenmt (9 Labour's unilateral nuclear disarma-

New statement of policy needed

There was even a reference to rejecting "British membership of any Pentagon-domi-nated military pact based on the first use of nuclear wea-pons", which, if words are to be suggests that Britain ought to leave Nato if the alliance will not change its policies. Yet one should not be too disturbed by the precise wording of contradictory formulae adopted by an opposition party at the beginning of a new parliament. The very contradictions indicate that at the least a per statement of policy will be required. Given the good will of his party, an adroit new leader might be able without too much difficulty to move Labour policy to a position more in line with majority thinking in this

But the tone of yesterday's debate suggests that Mr Kin-nock will have the very greatest difficulty in retaining the good will of his party if he attempts such an exercise.

It was the mood of intolerant, emotional adherence to unilateralism that was more disturbing than any vote. There phere as Mr James Callaghan was attacked and when he was subsequently given a reluctant hearing. That did not some like a party that would readily be prepared to think again. Perhaps the mood of the party will change well before the next election. Perhaps respect for Mr Kinnock's political skills will grow to the point at which he will be able to point at which he will be able to effect hig changes in policy by sleight of hand. Otherwise, there will need to be a great battle of principle within the party for which the new leadership would not seem to be well need.

Mr Kinnock is a declared unilateralist who gives high and probably overriding pri-ority to making Labour policy acceptable to the country. Mr Hattersley is a multilateralist who has accepted the obligations of a team player by taking on the deputy leadership. Mr Kinnock can fight campaign against unilateralism on the ground of politics) realism, but not of convictors without conflicting with his previously declared conviction. Mr Hattersley cannot fight $ big battle on grounds very different from those of Mr Kinnock without conflicting with his position as a team player.

There has been at Brighton this week a new acceptance in principle of political realities that the party cannot afford to divorce itself from the elector ate. But yesterday's debate indicated that this recognition in principle has yet to be translated into practice on this most delicate of issues. Despite the desire for unity, the passionate conflict still rages.

Filipino fury as Marcos devalues the peso again the Philippines peso in four spin. months brought new pressure on the Marcos Government last night as office workers staged more protests in the business district of the capital.

The oew drop in the value of the peso against the dollar came as a shock to many Filipinos and undelined the duplicity of the Marcos Government which has been emphasizing for the past few days the continuing viability of the Philippines economy despite some tough negotiations for the rescheduling of loans from the International Monetary Fund.

Paris court INLA case

From Diana Geddes

The Paris Court of Appeal has ordered that all charges be dropped against the three alleged Irish terrorists, Michael Plunket, Stephen King and Mary Reid, because of "irregularities" surrounding their ar-rest by the GIGN, the French equavalent of the British SAS.

The three, believed to have had connexions with the Irish National Liberation Army, were arrested in the Paris suburb of Vincennes oo August 28 last year, after the GIGN had searched their flat and had allegedly found guns, explosives and incriminating documents. The Elysée Palace immediately put our a statement halling their arrest as being of great importance in the coolext of nternational terrorism.

about the importance of their arrest and about the surrounding circumstances appeared to be confirmed in May en two officers involved in the affair admitted that grave integrilarities had taken place. None of the accused had been

Hongkong. (AFP, Rentes) - Sir Edward Ynude, the Governor of Hongkong, yesterday, called for "an atmosphere of calm and deliberation" in the Sino-British talks on the future of the colony.

He said this would be "to the Contrasts within a flawed masterpiece

Measure for Measure

Stratford

Enticed by the name of Vienna directors of Measure for Measure have variously projected the play forward to Freud's city, Brecht's Mahagonny, and now into the eighteenth century. Adrian Noble's stage swarms with sober state officials stage swarms with sooer state officials in full-skirted coats and jet-black wigs, exotically plumed fops and under-world grotesques whose diseases seem to have eaten into their costumes.

For a play much concerned with the contrasts between truth and seeming, this is a promising starting point; and the first moments of the performance seem to herald a masterpiece. Daniel Massey, as the Duke, rises from his desk to stand motionless before an ornate mirror where he is ritualistically divested of his working coat and attired in a robe of state. Ilona Sekacz accompanies this tablean with a deformed echo of Gluck's Orpheus, featuring a female voice melting from cantilena into orgasm. When this fades away, the transformed figure turns and delivers the first line to Escalus.

Bob Crowley's set, a cavernous state room bisected by a strip of carpet leading to the upstage mirror, lends itself to the moral duels and contradictions that make up so much of the action, while the carpeted strip is reserved for crucial moments of choice: Angelo's acknowledgement of desire, or isabelia's response to the sexual bribe. It is also used with marvellous fluency in passages where characters from different strands of the plot pass each other, almost touching, but blind to each other's

In the middle of this high formality and masquerade, there is the figure of Juliet Stevenson's Isabella, a heroine emotionally direct as Beethoven's Leonora.

presents is a girl whose inflexible disguised Duke suggests the substichastity in no way warps her natural spirits. In pleading for her brother's life, she takes such command of the stage that she ends up sitting in Angelo's chair, and, when the tution plot, she throws herself into his arms in spontaneous gratitude.

Throughout its first half, the production excels in the duologues which are among the chief glories of this play: not only the intensities of the death cell disputes, but also the comic duels between Escalus and Anthony O'Donnell's beligerently challenging Pompey, and between the Duke and Richard O'Callaghan's brightly-painted, insect-like Lucio.

The one doubt centres on David Schofield's Angelo, first seen as a demure little functionary in high heels, patiently justifying the ex-ecution to Isabella as if reasoning with a fractious child. Once desire strikes him down, his coat comes off and at the next tête-à-tête he is putting his feet up on the table and pacing her round the room like a predatory cat. Mr Schofield is an exceptionally dangerous actor, but that is no justification for giving the idea that the austere Angelo is an old hand at criminal seduction.

Whether for this reason or because of the change of set to a neutral prison wall, much of the dramatic heat evaporates after the interval. Mr Massey's Duke dwindles into a wry humnurist who has difficulty in reestablishing absolute authority at the end (appearing through the hinged mirror as a triumphal arch), though his delivery remains magical. Passing pleasures include a hulking Glaswegian Barnardine (Campbell Morrison) and a monumental Mrs Overdone from Peggy Mount: would that the best known to the saloon set as the author of several songs popularized by Blossom Dearie, Dave Frishberg has a way of singing which is reminiscent of those little dishes of crisps and nuts they serve in cocktail bars: crisp, brittle, well salted, moreish but not filling.

Suspended somewhere between the approaches of Noel Coward and Mose Allison, he observes and comments with a gentler version of the former's wit and a metropolitan rearrangement of the latter's phlegmatic sensibility. The hand-crafted delivery, 100, owes something to Allison: no distancing style is allowed to intrude between the man and his matter.

He can certainly be funny. Some of his numbers contained too many arcane American references (to the '55 Bel Air, to Chinese checkers and to fastening your suspenders, among others) for a Knightsbridge audience, but the one about his attorney travelled well and his song about the difficulty of writing another song about Paris included several imaginative pay-offs, plus a nudging mention of "pigeons under glass at the Deux Magots".

Another parallel with Mose Allison turned up when he stopped singing and demonstrated at the piano his fondness for the legacy of Duke Ellington, whose "Drop Me Off in Harlem" was sprung on a rangy bass line before Frishberg enmeshed the audience in a delightfully discursive sequence of tunes associated with Johnny Hodges. Full of solid mainstream values, from the lucid swing nf "Jeep's Blues" through the velvet balladry of "Star-Crossed Loves to the open smile of "Beginning to See the Light", his piano playing represents a decent snack, available over the counter for the next fortnight.

Though 70 this year and long a man of international repute. Witold Lutoslawski manages to go on writing each new piece as if he had never composed before, almost as if music had never existed before.

This is not a question of want of craftsmanship, for his music has a perfection of technique equalled by very few, and the obsessive neathers of his work actually contributes to its innocence and isolation. Everything works so well that one may sometimes feel listeners are unnecessary to the music's success, and always the cool is such as to-chill most responses other than admiring appraisal. Stravinsky on many occasions made music pat of what he did not say, but Linoslawski con-trives even to repress the fact of repression and to leave behind him a glistening cocoon still moist with the dew.

The point could not be more instance the second moveeconomically nor more elo-quently made than it was by the two instrumental pieces in-cluded in the London Sinfonietta's all-Lutoslawski programme on Tuesday. Both Grave and Epitoph are cologies, but not romantic laments or Stravins kian monuments; they have than mourning.

Grave, for cello and piano, was written in memory of the Polish musicologist Stefan Jarocinski and concerns itself net ruminates, the strings impeccably with its subject as a discuss, brass blow fanfares, a professional man: it develops harpsichord has the jitters. the first four notes of Debussy's Hilary Finch opera, a work central to.

Similarly, Epitaph owes its sprightly, pastoral character to the nature of the oboe, and although this is a tiny miniature it is typical of its composer in slipping out of any interpretanve net one might wish to trap it in. Lutoslawski's music is its own explanation and refuses

Two new works within the last week have confirmed the style. Last Thursday the composer's Third Symphony had its first performance by the Chica-go Symphony Orchestra under Sir Georg Solti. Playing for 26 minutes, the symphony runs through several phases of development but its dynamic is continuous between the comparable shudders at each end. It is expertly and boldly laid out for the resources of a virtuoso orchestra with plenty of work for the resplendent brass: there is a certain affinity with another recent American-inspired work, Tippen's: Fourth Symphony, except that Tippen's images cry out for metaphorical under standing whereas Lutoslawski's. exist for themselves.

Meanwhile, Lutoslawski has produced another treat for a crack team, his Chain 1, dedicated to the London Sinfonietta and given an exuberant, witty premiere by them. Within interposes a great variety of instrumental character: a clari-

Platée Sadler's Wells

Jean-Philippe Rameau, one of the greatest operatic geniuses of the eighteenth century, was born 300 years ago last week. Where was Covent Garden on this occasion, where was the Coliseum, where was Glyndebourne, where were Scottish, Welsh, Kent, Opera North? Nowhere, for the curious prejudice that Rameau's exotic art is untranslatable into our own time - a prejudice that silenced Handel's operas until the pioneers proved otherwise has held fast in this country. And so it is left to Lina. Lalandi's energetic, grotesquely under-funded English Bach Festival to do justice to Rameau, with the characteristically full measure of a week of productions at Sadler's Wells, Platée is enormous fun, and more than that it should not be missed by anyone with the remotest interest in the variety and diversity of operatic art. For Platee is an odd creation, a wistful comedy-cum-parody

in which Rameau seems to let the mask of nobility fall for a moment to reveal all the absurdity he sees beneath his art. As played in this nudgenudge, wink-wink production by Tom Hawkes, it is a romp: the ridiculous marsh-nymph Platee, whose absurd appearmerriment to all around, is camped up by Jean-Claude Orliae in a green shell ontift to look like Widow Twankey stranded on the Norfolk Broads. As Jupiter's mock-courtship of this creature unfolds, there which while away the space between the absences of plot Belinda Quirey's expert dancers meat us to serious musetles and eomic frogs, a Me Tarzan-You Jane rounne, a nasty set of transvestite Graces and a quite magnificent Chaconne, all to some of Rameau's most inventive music.

But, despite the comedy, an alarming seriousness keeps creeping through: Orliac sings Platee's broken, misaccentuated phrases with wit and perfect poise, yet there is real feeling beneath them. On the sidelines Marilyn Hill Smith's brilliant but over-large singing of La Folie provides a showpiece aria.

Peter Jeffes's sprightly, rather casual Mercury is an apt foil to Henry Herford's blustery Jupit-er, Harry Nicolf's sleepy Thes-pis in the delightful Prologue is a success, hut Terry Jenkins's prissy Momus falls victim to the Are You Being Served elements in the staging.

At the end, as Eiddwen Harrhy's hrash Juno reclaims Jupiter as her husband and Platée returns with the bite of pizzicato strings to her marsh, there is a rough sort of ancien régime justice - pretensions above your class won't get you anywhere - but there is pathos 100; Hawkes's lively one-dimensioual production misses the almost Mozartian ambiguity that surfaces time and again.

But that ambiguity can all be heard in the glorious music, which sparkles under Jean-Claude Malgoire's direction: his natural exuberance, combined with a highly professional band in the raised pit, ensures that, even if Folly rules the stage Music triumphs in the end.

Arthur Scargill bas oever lived anywhere but Worsborough since his birth there 45 years ago in a one-up, one-down pitman's cottage without one-down pitman's cottage without electricity, hot water or inside toilet. He has never had to, emerging from nearly 20 years down Woolley pit 10 miles away to assume full-time office at the National Union of Mineworkers' Yorkandia Permelant the road in Barnsley.

Not even high office could lure him away into the wider world for long. He simply moved the NUM national headquarters from the uncharted snares and bogs of Indian territory in Loodon to the safe, high, home ground of Sheffield, where the left-wing city of Sheffield, where the left-wing city council stood ready with a generous basket of grants and inducements. Logical enough, as London is notably deficient in coal mines, but it virtually rules out the informal contact with National Coal Board, Government, TIIC and other centres of influence. TUC and other centres of influence which Scargill's predecessor, Joe Gormley, found so useful. "Maggie can fly up if she wants to see me", was Scargill's arrogant provincial defence at the time. Even Geoff Boycott never insisted that an entire Test series be played at Headingley. Scargill was shaped exclusively on his native patch. His father, an ardent communist, took him to political meetings from an early age and encouraged him towards the pages of Marx and Tressell's The Ragged Trousered Philanthropists, while Arthur himself discovered and devoured Jack London and Mark Twain, He was, he says, always reading. His primary school teacher once recalled him as a studious boy, always eager for more work, and a to catch her out. He did not want to follow his father into the pit. Who would choose to dig coal in 1953, when mining was Stygian, primitive, dangerous and ill-paid toil compared with today's greatly modernized industry?

His political awareness, wide readoverman found him such a nuisance that he gave young Scargill the loneliest job in the pit, levelling tunnels well away from the face.

He applied to join the Labour Party, but they never answered his letter. So he wrote to the Daily Worker, which had an organizer round in a trice signing him up for the Young Communist League. It brought him a seat on the YCL national executive, tea with Khrushchev in Moscow, day-release classes at Leeds University to sit press. at the feet of left-wing academics, and Scargill never let his lack of obvious political success dull his ambition for self-advancement. He survived on his immense talent for organization, of the intense, nose-to-the-fine-detail kind that is the hallmark of the left-wing machine politician. He raised Wors-borough YCL branch membership from seven to seven hundred, but chose to part company with the Communist Party when the requirement to undertake such tedious tasks as selling the Daily Worker began to get in the way of his commitment to the miners and to himself.

He has been credited with inventing flying pickets. and certainly took a major part in organizing the roving squads, but equal credit for the invention is claimed by Trotskyist students at Sheffield Uni-

Whatever the case, it did Scargill's personal career no harm at all, for he soon found himself elected to his first full-time union post as Yorkshire compensation secretary, an unglamo-rous job akin to that of a social worker, sorting out miners' disability and pension claims. There, he built for himself a solid and substantial reputation for efficiency and effectiveness.

His years of behind the scenes work, getting himself known in key places where he could discreetly drum up support, and his forceful style as a platform orator, meant that he achieved his long-standing ambition to be Yorkshire area president with no trouble at all. He was on his home ground, in an era when the long-depressed miners were in a mood to go to the barricades, and he was king.

He was, and remains, a vociferous and uncomproing and personal drive made him a mising champion of coal; the membernatural to lead a strike of pit apprentices at the age of only 17. The overnoon found him and a ship knew he would keep coal in the forefront of the public mind, but they box would always give them the power of veto over his wilder excesses.

He was helped on his way both by the capitalist press, who gave him acres of publicity as their adopted Chief Ogre, and by the left-wing machine within the union, which backed him if for no other reason than that he was obviously going to win. To both these camps he has turned slightly sour. Now he will have nothing to do with the

He should never, they recken have fallen for the Trotskyists' ruse of writing to him for his views. When his written reply was prominently displayed during this year's TUC in the Workers' Revolutionary Party's anti-Stalinist and pro-Trotskyist paper News Line, the NUM's seasoned communist vicepresident, Michael McGahey, growled to a group of reporters: "That Scargill's got a lot to learn".

He has not learnt to keep his mouth shut or although Scargill professes Stalinism as others profess religion, there is no particular faction of the left which pulls his political strings. He is a rogue animal who does not appear to have learned the tactic of keeping his mouth shut. A more experienced operator would not have let himself be caught condemning Solidarity or condoning the Korean airliner tragedy, to the delight of Moscow Radio which broadcast his comments.

Most major issues on which Scargill has taken a stand have gone against him. While still in Yorkshire, he urged the NUM's five Yorkshire sponsored MPs to vote against the Common Market; four of them voted in favour. Nor did they choose to follow his advice on voting against nuclear disarmament, or on backing Tony

Scargill also spearheaded a campaign against the introduction of the coal board's incentive bonus scheme; the membership voted decisively to

Scargill feared that the bonus scheme, which operates on a local rather than a national basis, would shift power and influence away from the NUM and its role in national negotiations. In this he has been proved absolutely correct and it goes some way towards explaining his failure to drum up sufficient support for industrial action in two national

Even on his home ground the Scargill political machine is not infallible. It was caught badly wrongfooted this year in its plan to unseat Roy Mason as Barnsley Central's Labour candidate and replace him with a candidate more open to NUM

Scargill's brief sojourn in London away from his familar home ground was not a happy period. He is happiest and most at ease in a miners' welfare institute, revelling in the instant recognition and the goodnatured chaffing. In person he is amiable, charty, not at all intense, and has the capacity to make half a pint of lager last for hours while all around are slaking gargantuan thirsts. It would be hard to find anyone who had ever Benn for the Labour deputy leadership. fallen out with him on a personal level.

Away from the safety of home ground he tends to be remote, secretive shutting himself away like a Hollywood recluse. The miners' leaders are almost without exception, gargarious and friendly men who, at traion conferences, will happily put aside political differences and hold open court in the bar all night with anyone who cares to talk to them.

Scargill, on the other hand, hides himself away in his suite and is rarely seen on the social circuit. His territory is guarded by the beefy figure of his "pinder", Jim Parker, an ex-miner who is officially his chauffeur.

Nevertheless, he undoubtedly enjoys the high life that success has brought him, with his £27,500 a year salary, his 29th-floor union-provided luxury flat in the Barbican, and his 4.2 litre cargill's greatest misfortune is to have come to the presi-dency of the union 10 years too late. Had he led the miners to the barricades in 1972 and 1974 with the same success as Joe Gormley (who at first resisted the militant tide but was quick to turn and swim with it when he appreciated its strength), Scargill would be a hero. One suspects a large element of jealousy in the bad grace with which he boycotted Joe Gornley's retirement dinner.

The union is a victim of its own success

But the union is now largely a victim of its own success. Greatly improved basic wages, topped up by an admittedly highly variable bonus scheme, have put many miners in the mortgage and foreign holiday class, from where militancy looks much less appealing. Besides, in a time of raging unemployment, a job in the pits has come to be regarded as a very secure number, in the same way that working men once regarded a job in the police.

Scargill's real battle now is not over wages, but over the Government's avowed intention of streamlining the industry and shutting pits which are inefficient and enormously costly. Again he has been basically correct in warning, long before most others, that such a move was in the offing. And he has the example of the steel industry, where 25,000 men lost their jobs in Sheffield alone, as a model of what may happen.

The steel unions chose to accept drastic surgery without a serious fight. Scargill is more likely, on past form, to choose the head-on approach, and if he asks his members for support often coough he may eventually get it, which he will then present as a triumph. Whether the membership will be any better off as a result is questionable.

In the past week he seems at least to have learned to save his energies and his union's muscle for the main fight, having agreed to put the secondary issue of this year's wage claim to the -membership without any call for. militant action.

'The trouble with Arthur", a wellknown British communist figure once remarked, "is that his brains will never match his ego".

A random test in the Tour de Corse at the weekend led to disqualification of Dutch star Rick van Flinders. He was found guilty of having a forbidden substance, namely refined belium, concealed in his bicycle tyres. Officials first became suspicious when Rick came to the top of a hill climb and sailed into mid-air, keeping aloft for 50 yards. They found that with the addition of the lighter-than air substance his bike weighed no more than two or three grammes.

"I was quite relieved, actually", commented the Dutch ace later. "I thought I was on a bad trip."

Gaitskell was above all a man

Gaitskell at his best, tireles efficient, but just a little sactimonious over opposition. Gaitskell evidently believed in a limited restructuring of British society, and many of the underlying political assump-tions in this Diary have only that the quarrel with Bevan was recently been challenged. Throughout the decade or so covered by the Diary industrial production did indeed rise; but the so-called age of affluence was still in the near future. However, Gaitskell told the visiting Soviet leader, Malenkov, in March 1956 that "our trouble was that property had trouble was that prosperity had made too many workers vote. This was the pattern set by the making of the North Atlantic treaty, by the 1949 sterling devaluation, and by the rearmament programmes of the early 1950s. Suez broke this foreign policy model, a sad event followed by the resurgence of France and West Germany together with the advent of the EEC. Bailey Black and White Memories By Martin Harrison, and David Bailey (Dent, £20)

Snowdon. Sittings 1979-1983 (Weidenfeld & Nicolson, £10.95)

Portraits Introduction by Colin Ford (Thames & Hudson, £9.95)

Adulation, money and sex; a curious trimurvirate but one that photographer David Bailey insists spurs him to action. Presumably it was this hedonism that led Antonioni in 1967; to model the film Blow Up loosely on the photographer's remarkable causer.

Bailey tells as that his early taste for glamour was satisfied in the picture palaces of London's east end. After leaving school he drifted for a couple of years before conscription sent him into the RAF. It was while in the RAF that he began to realize the full potential of photography. After conscription he found a position as an assistant in the studies of fashion photographer John French and his career was launched. Success in the pages of Vogas followed swiftly. With a natural sevendipity and flair for innovation Bailey produced candid fashion photographs with models who seemed to be real people. Fashion photography was suddenly transformed, it was more alive and somehow more relevant and this never more so than when Bailey shot his impressionistic pictures on the streets of New York, Jean Shrimpton, synonymous with Bailey and the period became a pop icon and household name; the clothes she modelled, her hairstyles and her peculiar fresh faced elegance encapsulate the strange evan-escence that was the sixties.

While moulding our perception of fashion and beauty Bailey simultaneously pursued a distinct style of portrait photography which was often unashamedeclectic and reduced his subjects to simple graphic statements. He finally embalmed the decade in a curious and audacious collection of pictures called Goodbye Baby and Amen, published as a book in 1969.

In Goodbye Baby, pop stars, pop artists and media personalities fawn in front of Bailey's lens and the exciting and vacnous decade is condensed into a tied litany of style and personality. Malcolm Muggeridge, metamorphosed by Bailey into a thrusting disembodied head leering from the page, was driven to savage the book as nothing but show business and candy flows, a view much supported in the press at the time. Sixteen of Goodbye Baby's originals are included in the present memoir. are included in the present memoir.

If Bailey is a metaphorical roffien in a world of media people then Lord Snowdon is a gentleman in a world of the arts. All the photographs in Sittings were made in Snewdon's London studio, a mere slit of a room barely 14 × 10, with quarry tile floor and heavy black drapes controlling the daylight. There is in his work an historical Englishness and a clarity born of patient charryation. Snowdon himself believes his photographs are little more than a record of people whom other people wanted to see at a particular time. His self-assessment is at a particular time. Firs seit-assessment is correct. Rarely will these photographs be remembered for anything other than their subjects, but what subjects they are; writers, actors, philosophers, and poli-ticians all carefully observed and recorded for posterity. But Snowdon's lasting achievement and his compassionate feeling. for humanity is absent from these pages. For all that, the photographs are skiffully lit and executed, almost classically composed and contrived, by a photographer who insists on seeing himself as a Photography at its best is about time transcended, a view apported by Snowdon when he writes that the best photographs are those that sum up in a moment more than that moment. At worst photography is merely documentation, a visual reference for some future social historian. Bailey holds the latter view; documentation is, he says, the most you can ever hope for photography. However it is this feeling of time transcended engendered by looking at the photographs in Portraits that gives this volume its strength.

The Kingdom by the

By Paul Theroux

(Hamish Hamilton, £9.95) When Paul Theroux told an Englishman last year that he was about to take a trip round the United Kingdom, the man said; "It sounds about as much fun as chasing a mouse round a pisspot." And I have to say that, until Theroux reaches Ulster, going clockwise from Graves-end, this account of the journey does read a bit like that. Perhaps his mistake was to have stuck doggedly to the coast of England and Wales, where the contrast between natural beauty and our rape of it is most emphatically seen and felt tinues through Scotland, on Theroux winces a lot along which Theroux is again very these stretches, and with good good indeed. There would have reason. Not only have the coastal towns been despoiled in the hadn't fallen for the Highlands and he does likes reason. Not only have the constal towns been despoiled in the names of enterminment, Defence and industry; but those making holidays in them, and especially those in the catering trade, appear to be a bitter, disgruntled and disillusioned crowd oo the whole. It says much for Theroux's own balance that some of his generatized comments put us in a prettier light: the English were "humane but they were also shy", their hospitality combined "wary curiosity and frugal kindness", and ready? — "the English had long, merciless memories." The Weish were better natured, with "a mildly stunned and slap-happy personstunned and slap-happy person-

I found the novelist's technique something of a trial in this part of the book. Paragraphs two or three sentences ong, one after the other, may work on the pages of a fiction, but in this context they are laborious. Nor is it easy to get involved in a subject when the another, carefully logging each, but sketchily. Were it not for his superb ear for what people are saying to him, or each other, some of The Kingdom by the Sez would be not so much less than a spy.

heads on the South Coast, Jan Morris in Wales, friendly cops in Toxteth, and hard porn for OAPs in Southport, Theroux goes over the water and all is transformed. He expands in every way, describing Ulster more thoughtfully than anyone I've read for a long time. It is "a society in which everyone talked about persecution, but no-one took any blame." It was also the first place where anyone asked him home to lunch. I hope the Americans (at whom this book, I suspect, is aimed at more than us) pay careful attention to their compatriot's views on the topic in which they assume such a proprietory interest.

The expansive mood continues through Scotland, on which Theroux is again very having pottered down the East Coast of England in defiance of last year's rail strike. En route it solves sadly, a small mystery that has nagged this reader since The Great Railway Bazaar. In that book, you'll recall, a Mr Duffill missed his train at Domodossola, a misfortune that has given the language a involved in a subject when the new verb. Theroux tracked subject changes more than once down his home in Barrow-on almost every page, as upon-Humber, only to find that Theroux flits from one town to Duffill had died two years before. From what relatives had to say about his past, Theroux concludes that when he met the elderly Englishman on that train, the fellow was nothing less than a spy.

A sly dig this, the Head showing that his ear's close to the ground. Everyone knows old Cricky's classes have become a bit of a joke. Of course the history man could still trade facts about the French Revolution with the best of them if he chose to. But instead he has taken to agonizing about the point of history, even, God help us, suggesting that there might be lessons to be learnt from the events of the past!

Then there are Tom Crick's yo stories. Weird, twisted fables about the phlegmatic folk unfortunate enough to have to pump a muddy living out of the odious Ouse and its treache tributaries. Awfully flat, Norfolk (so God has a clear view, the Fenmen tell their children); ungenerous too to families like the Cricks whose lives have been shaped for centuries by two simple laws of nature: land sinks and silt collects.

The trouble with this kind of overkill is that eventually it gets to the reader. I found myself wondering whether the whole cel-motif wasn't just a ploy to remind us of Mr Swift's affinity to Gunther Grass (remember the horse's head in The Tin Drum?), and ended up reflecting that even his main stylistic fault - pinguescence - is one shared by eels in their jellied form. Wisden Anthology, 1963-1982

Edited by Benny Green (Queen Anne Press, £29.50)

Readers anxious to know what happened at Hove in 1977 on the eleventh, twelfth and thirteenth days of May when the Lancashire Eleven travelled down to the south coast to play Sussex, can put ignorance to flight by turning to page 453 of this great and heavy anthology. In Hove, it rained Indeed, it rained so much that only four overs of play were possible, cone of them bowled by the estimable Lancashire off-spin ner Jack Simmons, who is so rarely out of the thoughts of those who properly regard Old Trafford as the Rome or perhaps more fairly the Avignon of cricket. The contemplation of these events - or of what happened at Sion Mills, Londonderry, when Ireland played the West Indies on 2nd July, 1969 (Ireland, of course, won by 9 wickets) or of the score cards of a thousand and one other games - will give the serious man or woman, which is to say the cricket lover, almost sufficient satisfaction in itself. But Wisden and Mr Benny Green, the Editor of this anthology, provide much

For example, the Hove match was notable for more than the absence of an over from Simmons. During those damp days, the then Sussex captain, Tony Greig, spilled the beans about the Packer circus. A controversy almost as complex and long-running as Jarudyce vs Jarudyce burst upon us with momentous consequences for cricket, as Mr Gordon Ross points out in his admirably fair and clear essay on

This is one of many contributions to the anthology which not only delight and inform, but also remind us of how much has changed in the cricket world and the world beyond its boundary in the past two decades. We have moved from a time in which it was deemed necessary to announce before the start of play at Lords that Mr Titmus's initials should have been printed after not before his surname since he was no gentleman, or at least oc

Gentleman, to days when fast bowlers hurl down bumpers at tail-enders. Is there no limit to Whether or not Mr Green's "fall of the gentry" account of the reasons for the changes in cricket holds much water, the fact that they have taken place is undeniable. Some of the effects are bad. Comparing his first Test Match against Australia at Lords in 1930 with the Centenary Test 50 years on, G.O. Allen notes that In 1930, 260 overs of pace and 245 of spin were bowled at an average of 21.50 an hour: in 1980, 210 overs of pace and 122 of spin were bowled at an average of 15.82 an hour. The leg spinner is pretty well as dead as the dodo. In 1907, as A. A. Thompson reminds those of us who had forgotten, the South African tourists had four googly bowlers on their side.

Yet it is not all downhill. Ther is still so much to savour, the Botham 'annus mirabilis,' the ferocious grace of Viv Richards, the surreal radio humour of Brian nston - all this and the arrival of Wisden to look forward to every year.

For this reviewer, there 2 three highlights. First, there is the collection of obitmaries, the report of great deeds done, of honour, o eavour. There is a roll-call of heroes, Rhodes and Hobbes Strudwick and Woolley, "Tiger" Smith and Cardus.

Next, there is Cardus's own essay on "Gentleman George" -I. B. Statham himself - the champion of my boyhood. Sin Neville includes Frank Tyson's ndsome tribute to Statham To me it felt like having Menuhin playing second fiddle to my lead"

Finally, there is Basil Easter brook's essay on "the dreaded cypher", which includes a report of the Royal Surrey Militia's inpings against Shillingtee in 1855. With Sgt Ayling run out by 15 yards, the Militia cantered to nought.

The anthology costs £29,50. It is worth every penny. During the winter months ahead, we must remember Wisden and Mr Green

Only a work of this kind, on the grand scale, can properly illustrate those pressures and the extraordinary range of the responses that Pitt was able to give. Time and again he showed a rare sense of what was due to the occasion. With astonishing magnanimity he forebore to reveal Charles James Fox's involvement in an intrigue with traversing ministerial policy, which by any standard came near to the verge of a treasonable misdemeanour and gives a lamentable impression of Fox's flawed political integrity. When a bad harvest sent bread prices rocketing Pitt plunged into state trading in grain - until Parlia-ment imposed its veto. In these and other ways, as Ehrman makes clear, the fiberal impuls-es in Pitt's mind survived the reaction against revolution after 1790. And this was also true of foreign affairs. No other published work, perhaps, makes so clear the ambiguities and hesitations of British support for a Bourbon restoration in France. Even under the stress of war the Pittite circle preserved its sympathy for the idea of French constitutional monarchy, was not averse to seeing those elements that were of value salvaged from the Revolution of 1789 and — unlike Edmund Burke — hung back from any endorsement of the Bourbon princes' demands for a return to the pre-revolutionary

Dreaming tricks and paradoxes

Anthony Burgess tells how he once met Borges at a reception in the United States. The South American writer was being shadowed by a man from the Argentine Embassy, and so they communicated in Old English. The idea of two men with common names talking in a dead language could be the stuff of a short story by Borges, who so often enters his own fiction. It also reveals how complete is his grasp of our literature, 2 literature in which he has quarried all his life. The influence of this literature on Argentine writers was to be the subject of a lecture he delivered last night at the Royal Society of Arts to inaugurate the Anglo-Argentine Society's Jorge Luis Borges Lecture.
"In a sense I've always been here", he told me on his first visit to this country since the Falklands conflict. "When deciphering the Encyclopaedia Britannica in my father's library, when reading Pil-grim's Progress. The Time Machine and Chesterton, I've been homecoming all the time, I've read so many English books." (An eternal candidate for the Nobel Prize, were he ever to win it, the first thing he would buy would be a complete set of Stevenson. "Not a first edition, but the last because there would be Borges is not only returning to his literary origins, but also to the land of his ancestors. In fact his grandmother, Fanny Haslam, who was born in Hanley of Northumb-rian Quaker stock, became the subject of a recent hoax reported as true in this very newspaper. The story went that in her honour Borges buried the head of a Celtic saint. St Penket, in a Staffordshire garden. The past is always being changed he chuckled. "Good for me if I did

When she married Colonel Francisco Borges, after meeting him at a ball in Parana, Fanny brought to the family the congenital blindness of the Haslams. "A small amount of English blood goes a long way. My great-grandfather died blind. My grandmother died blind. My father died blind with a smile on his face and I hope I will do the same. I have ontlived my span. Reaching the age of 84 is a mistake really. My advice is three-score years and ten."

Borges forebears were not only Quakers: they were also military men who fought against the Indians, the Paraguayans - and each other. In 1874, "during one of our civil wars". Colonel Borges rode out on horseback in a white poncho following his defeat at the battle of La Verde. He was shot by two Remington bullets. "A fine fate", exults his grandson, who is amused to think that the firm which killed Fanny's husband bears the same name as that which shaves him every morning. "Better for a man to die a violent death than to die bedridden."

The Falklands dispute touched a tender nerve. "Wars are either for the epie and the elegy, or for oblivion." It was evident to which he consigned the latter. To an interviewer in Buenos Aires he had complained how victory was cele brated before the battle had begun; how there was talk of anti-colonial ism to justify the most colonial act in "recorded history"; and - with typical humour - how the military should have consulted a good lawyer to point out the difference between one's legal right to a territory and its invasion: someone, for instance, like Costa Mendes.

most other South American writers do, and do so under his influence. Garcia Marquez kept 14 volumes of his work permanently beside him in exile, while Carlos Fuentes has written of Borges that without his prose, there would be no modern novel in South America today.

"In that case, I'm guilty of a lot", is his modest comment. Writing is directed dreaming. Subjects choose me. I try not to interfere. If the reader feels the writer is dreaming sincerely, that's all that matters. I never reread my own stuff. I don't like what I write. The whole thing's a kind of superstition. There is much talk of learning how to beat the machine, though this is not an option readily available to all job applicants or even criminals. One tactic, apparently, is to put a tin-tack in your shoe, and press down hard while being asked a range of questions. The pain produces a physiological response that may confuse the test results. The experts, however, say that though beating the text is possible and spies are almost certainly trained to do so, it is difficult to do so unobtrusively. Suddenly the street-wise are out of date

Only a fool complains about new words coming into British English from the United States, merely because they are American. There are more of them using the language over there, and they are notably versatile and innovative with the mother tongue. Only a trendy adopts a new usage merely because it is American. He or she often gets it wrong, so giving the rest of us a giggle and a certain Schadenfreude at seeing an Emperor of Language in new clothes. It is happening to the quite recent American phrase "street-wise", which was coined in the States in the middle 1960s for the urban jargons of social workers and journalists. The Americans use the phrase to mean the quality of being familiar with local people and their problems; wise to the ways of people who live on the city streets, that is, cities "I am a member of enough railway preservation societies to sink a large boot."

He on the city streets, that is, cities being cities, the poor, the homeless, the petty criminals, and so on. It is a desirable compassionate quality for social workers and aspiring politicians to pretend to have, anyway. Here is an example of the politician.

from The New York Times Magazine: "No mayor can function effectively unless he has around him competent and street-wise people who can assume much of his responsibility." It has come to mean also, in parallel, the knowing quality of being able to look after oneself on the streets of New York; the toughness that has enabled city kids from Dickens to Runyon to today to survive m the concrete jungle. Here is an example of the Sociologese, from The New Yorker:"A social worker therefore had to be wary as well as trustful, be securityminded as well as loving, and be street-wise as well as compassionate. This new style of social work has been evolving during the last ten years or so on the streets of New York."

The phrase is well-known in the United States. It is less well-known over here, and is being picked up by magpies of language, and used in odd new ways. Some of them take it to mean sophisticated, whatever that means. But fashion writers, those gaudy peacocks of English prose, have adopted "street-wise" to mean an individual way of wearing extremely expensive clothes. I do not see the necessity. Why cannot they write "panache"? Or, if that is too long and exotic a word for their readers, why cannot they use "dash" or "style"? Why, for that matter, can they not write about ordinary clothes that a femme moyenne luxueuse might be able to afford? But that is another question. The warning behind Kinnock's smile faced with a Labour leader whom the voters, as a whole, will find much more attractive than they found Mr Foot. In almost any circumstances, of course, a political party is likely to be given a temporary boost by a fresh face at the top, but the advantage Labour will gain from Mr Kinnock's election is likely to be much greater than can be attributed simply to

Mr Kinnock's greatest asset is his bubbling good humour, A smile is seldom absent from his face and, when it is, he usually looks (even when gravity is required) as though he is having trouble in keeping it away. In television interviews, he appears frank, relaxed and amused and, when he is discomforted, he quickly bounces back. Above all, he is capable of delivering a passionate speech in praise of socialism without sounding as though he is personally consumed with rage and indignation, but rather giving the impression that he is fired by the nobility of the concept. The contrast with Mr Foot is sharp and the unaligned elector is likely to find Mr

Kinnock a pleasant change.
To most voters, Mr Kinnock's socialism with a smile is likely to be much more palatable. He offers it (speaking as an "ordinary" man) as though it is something he wants for everybody because it can bring the things in life he wants for his own family. In his short speech after his election, he spoke of socialism as the most rational thing on the agenda of mankind for its improvement, and his arrival in the leadership coincides with the conversion of many of his far left supporters to the idea that since this is not how socialism has lately appeared to most people, its face, at least, must now be remodelled.

So we see the amazing spectacle of people on the hard left declaring that abour must be a party for house ownership and supporting the sale of council houses, advocating decentra-lization and more scope for local authorities and for all kinds of participation; and even agreeing that the present forms of public ownership should not be sacrosanct and ought to be made more accountable.

Such ideas are very generalized and they will meet resistance from those with more rigidly traditional notions of what socialism should mean. But, coinciding with the arrival of a new leader who has a very different personality, they signal at least the possibility of modulation to a new and more friendly key in Labour policy – and that could be soothing in the public

The pleasantness of Mr Krnnock (together with the strength he derives from being elected by a wider party electorate than his predecessors) will do much to offset. for a short honeymoon period, both his lack of ministerial experience and the incoherent state of party policy on the most essential questions of economic management and defence.

To this be adds the characteristic Welsh ability to seem classless in a manner that usually defeats the disadvantage if the public concludes that the word-spinning hides a lack of hard thought, but, for the moment, they will serve him well

In other words, Mr Kinnock will resent a problem for Mrs Thatcher. No doubt, she will run rings round him in the House of Commons, not simply because she is experienced and has the weight of officialdom behind her, but because Mr Kinnock never seems comfortable with facts and figures, which are Mrs Thatch-er's special strength. But there is more to it than that

The Government's principal asset has been its (and particularly Mrs. Thatcher's) wholebearted belief in what it has been doing and its willingness to stick to it. But recently, there has been a certain appearance of rigidity in the Government's presentation of its public face. Mrs Thatcher herself has seemed to feel that she has nothing much to learn and, by one or two injudicious, off the cuff remarks, she has laid herself open to the caricature that she humourlessly sees herself as a kind of superwoman Prime Minister.

In fact, she is a flexible politician who does listen. There has also been quite a lot of new thinking going on in the Government, particularly on such questions as the social implications of public spending economics. But the impression has been that of an unresponsive Government which is not greatly interested in what the public thinks, but only in its own thoughts. It happens at all stages to all governments and prime ministers, and it is partly the consequence of the pressures of office and the lack of time in which to think new thoughts and develop old ones. But it is a potentially dangerous stage in a Government's life at which to be faced by a new, young and ebullient Labour leader whose gift of words can for a time hide confusion of policy - particularly when he proclaims socialism as noble creed for every man as the alternative to the constriction of the Government's financial policies and the consequences for unemployment

In the long run, the facts of politics will be decisive. If the Labour Party cannot produce sensible policies that the electorate wants, and unite round them, the smiling face of Mr Kinnock will not rescue it. But. for the next year, he has the chance to regain some of his party's lost popular support precisely because it is, for the moment, committed to so little. Mrs Thatcher would be well advised not to underestimate him because he is inexperienced. She will, no doubt, withstand him in the House of Commons, but, on television, he could be a more formidable proposition.

The built-in disunity of the Labour Party is still evidence of long-term decline. But it is still possible that Mr Kinnock could arrest its momentum and perhaps prevent Mrs Thatcher from getting the full victory she wants in a third Parliament if the Conservatives do English. His Welsh power of rhetoric not take him seriously enough.

A MAN OF PEACE

The award of the Nobel Peace was saying to the regime. He and his more responsible advisers not be celebrated merely for its propaganda value and the discomfort it will cause the Polish regime. It makes a serious and important point. The danger to peace in Europe derives not just from the confrontation of the super powers and the accumulation of nuclear weapons but from the imposition on Eastern Europe of systems of government which are alien and unacceptable to the people who live under them. Since this situation cannot be directly challenged by military force in the nuclear age it can probably be changed only by evolution, unless uncontrolled disintegration sets in first. Therefore the cause of peace is furthered hy those such as Mr Walesa who work responsibly and peacefully for representative institutions and human rights in Eastern

This point is spelled out in the Helsinki Final Act hut not fully accepted in East or West. The Soviet Union is still a long way from realizing that its security might be better served by viable regimes in Eastern Europe than by the unstable, inefficient and largely hostile empire to which it must now devote so much time and money. In the West, behind the applause for almost all forms of opposition in the East, there is often a lingering fear that any change in the status quo could usher in a period of greater

Mr Walesa provided the beginnings of an answer to both sets of fears. He was not trying to overthrow the system but to modify it in ways that would have opened up genuine channels of communication between rulers and ruled. "Socialism, yes; your methods, no" was what he especially, iromically, those now facing trial - were also very conscious of the need to respect Soviet security interests.

Of course, nobody knows whether, if genuine democratization had once started, it could have been held within those limits. Perhaps not. But Mr Walesa was sincere in trying. He did not get the chance to prove himself right or wrong. Yet, like Martin Luther King, he achieved the remarkable feat of leading a movement of deeply angry and frustrated people without provoking a single act of serious political violence. In the whole period of Solidarity's existence violence was used only by the regime. This is too easy to take for granted. It is a tribute both to the leadership of Mr Walesa and to the maturity of most members of Solidarity, who held in check the more hot-headed of their colleagues. If the radicals gradually began to gain more power in the later period it was largely because the regime undercut the moderates by refusing to nego-tiate in good faith. Even then, the peaceful methods advocated by Mr Walesa were not abandoned. Even if this were his only achievement he would be a worthy recipient of the peace prize. But in fact he achieved more. As he said of the Solidarity period in a speech written for delivery at Harvard in May and read in his absence, "Millions of people became citizens again . . Changes that go on now, in human relations and in relations between institutions and people are not so much determined by legislation . . . as hy a new kind of consciousness

... The legal system remains virtually unchanged but people's attitudes to it have changed enormously. Until recently people working in the same room feared each other, now they form together a clandestine unit of Solidarity".

This is the historical change with which the regime still cannot come to terms. The Peace Prize should make it think again. All its efforts to discredit Mr Walesa have failed. They had failed before the award of the prize. They now have even less chance of success. Mr Walesa's authority will be enormously increased, and the morale of the Polish people will be raised by this gesture of international support as it was by the election of a Polish Pope. Mr Walesa's spirits should also receive a much needed boost, for he has been under intense surveillance and harassment for some time.

If the regime knew how to seize this moment it might have a chance of escaping from its present impasse. It needs Mr Walesa. One day it may discover this, as it belatedly found it needed the late Cardinal Wyszynski, after persecuting him for years. It needs him because it needs someone who can nego-tiate on behalf of the people. It thought that Cardinal Glemp could fulfil this role but he has turned out to lack sufficient authority. Mr Walesa could step in if given the chance. The moment is relatively propitious. Solidarity is re-thinking its role and its tactics. It is realistically not expecting a full restoration. It is merely trying to demonstrate that the regime cannot rule hy terror alone, that accomodation and dialogue are essential. That point should have reached the regime by now. Whether it is able to act accordingly is another

OUESTIONS FOR MR KINNOCK

Mr Neil Kinnock will make his inaugural speech to the Labour Conference today less encumbered than most of his predecessors by precise and binding policy commitments and, indeed, from a much more open position generally. This is, of course, only a temporary advan-tage and it arises from the very-negotiations. incoherence of Labour policy on salient issues, particularly difficulty about passing a resoldefence and the management of ution calling for the unconine economy. Nevel advantage exists for the moment, and Mr Kinnock's keynote speech will give the first indication of the sort of use he may try to make of it. Mr Kinnock's initial freedom, such as it is, arises from the very despair into which the Labour Party was plunged by its election defeat, and from the fear on the far left that if they did not now unite round the new leader and show some willingness to help pull the warring wings of the party together, Labour would face extinction. That is why Mr Roy Hattersley achieved such substantial support, even from the left-wing Labour constituency element. It is also why Mr Kinnock has achieved a broadly would have to be at the heart of halanced National Executive Committee (albeit one in which the left as a whole, including his own supporters of the soft left, is predominant) instead of an NEC dominated by the far left, as had been widely predicted.

On policy itself, the Conference has shown an almost touching willingness to accept mutually-contradictory statements for the sake of unity, or policies couched in such general terms as to make them almost meaningless. Thus, on defence yesterday the conference accepted the new NEC statement on defence and disarmament which, condemning Cruise missiles and Trident, and promising to work for a nuclear-free Europe (a generalization anyone in any party could accept) also stated that Polaris submarines should weapons on the apparent ground that this was existing party policy. Moreover it even accepted a resolution which included rejection of membership of "any Pentagon-dominated military pact based on the first use of nuclear weapons" (an obvious reference to NATO) with Mr Alec Kitson, on behalf of the NEC making it respectable by a passing acknowledgment that, of course, remaining m NATO was party policy. As for economic policy, the statement approved by the conference yesterday was simply a re-hash of the election programme in more generalized terms with no serious reference any controlled economy. Nor was there any insight into how Labour would avoid the inflationary consequences of its vast projected spending programme.

Yet the conference also had no

So many self-cancelling or vague statements leave Mr Kinnock some scope for bringing his own thinking to bear on Labour's credibility problems. He himself appears to accept that the party must take some note of what the electorate dislikes about its offering on end, the British electorate will June 9. But what does this mean in practice? Is he prepared, as a unilateralist, to adhere firmly and publicly to negotiations over Polaris, a commitment which at least jettisons the absurd idea that peace can be assisted by grand gestures of renunciation by individual members of the Western Alliance? Is he going to follow Mr Michael Foot's parting anathema on economic competition? Is Mr Kinnock, himself, still wholeheartedly in the fully cont favour society; the non-competitive society; the kind of society for which Mr Benn yesterday got the delegates cheering when he also affirmed that Labour must stick to its policies of controlling capital, money and trade, and the appropriate banks and insti-

Labour's urge to reject compe-tition and freedom, and to substitute the controlled society is at the heart of it s dilemma. To make it more palatable, some of Mr Kinnock's left-wing supporters now proclaim the merits of decentralization, participation and the private ownership of council houses as their policy. But such ideas only touch cosmetically the fringes Labour's difficulty. It is what Mr Kinnock himself really thinks about the virtues of competitiveness, and social and economic freedom and what he feels about their survival in Labour's kind of controlled society that is now of principal public interest. What would life really be like under socialism for the "ordinary" people Mr Kinnock claims, as a socialist, to represent? That is the question to which, in the

A persuasive argument was offered for the scheme by Donald Denman, Emeritus Professor of Land Economics at Cambridge University, in a lecture designed to kindle the enthusiasm of industry, the city as with the land, so with the sea bed". That meant extending the those in favour of the idea are principles of planning and man-principles of planning and man-principles of planning and man-agement of land and the air space above it to cover the sea sea bed was a physical con-

The use of the oceans can be divided into three groups; hydrocarbon recovery and mining, fisheries and functional projects. The third category covers things, like tidal and wave projects, reclaimed lands and artificial islands such as Japan's city-onthe-sea programme. It also includes the use of the seas as the dustbins of the industrial nations.

However, the practice of discarding radioactive waste in the oceans clearly debars any other nation from using that part of the sea. Hence the conception of a sea bed resources manager; but acting for whom? A healthier way with the NHS

From Mr A. J. Sadler

Sir. Your editorial of September 26, "No time to tinker" calls for radical policies which strike at the whole structure of the subsidies (of the public sector) rather than try to contain them by a thousand cuts", and you question whether the NHS is "structurally, financially or even morally" the best means to the end of improving the standard of the nation's health.

Today (September 28) Mr Bruce-Gardyne writes in praise of the French system of insurance funding for health care which, he claims, ensures greater efficiency and cost control. Since the nonon of cutting out whole "functions" of the public sector is rapidly gaining ground in Conservative thinking, it is worth bearing in mind some of the implications of this train of thought. Whatever the merits or demerits of insurance funding for health care (and they are a lot more varied and complex than Mr Bruce-Gardyne states) one thing is certain: the cost to the individual and to the nation would be higher and would rise more rapidly than has been the case in the taxation-funded NHS.

Yet there is no evidence that other countries in the Western world who devote up to twice the proportion of their GNP to health care that we do enjoy better health than us. NHS costs are as low as they are precisely because the service is taxation-funded; our hospitals may be tatty and there may be waiting lists for non-urgent admission, hu for what we spend on health care we get exceptional value for money. Ask those who work in the French alth care system why they, as from next January, are changing the way they pay for hospital care to break the direct link between treatment and payment. It is not because they have a socialist government; it is to reduce the inflationary tendencies of insurance funding.

It is curious that ideological hostility to the very notion of public services should lead to policies which would defeat the Government's own objectives. Where will the investment in wealth-creating industries come from if we devote more and more of our GNP to a non-productive service sector?

However, as an NHS administrator, why should I worry? Other countries not only spend more on their bealth-care systems: their administrative costs are higher, too. Yours faithfully,

A. J. SADLER. 169 Park Hill Road, Birmingham,

Nursing of a VIP

From Mr James McKenzie

Sir, What rot Jock Bruce-Gardyne (feature, September 28) writes! If he believes that the standard and Government minister, received in a private room would have been the same if he had been Joe Bloggs in a public ward with twenty other patients vying for the attention of three or four hard-pressed nurses, that belief displays a naivery unbecoming in a former Treasury minister.

Does it not occur to him that it is possible that staff were diverted from attending others to ensure that a VIP had no cause for complaint? It is not only money that buys privilege: position does too. Yours faithfully,

JAMES MCKENZIE, 31 Hamilton Drive, September 29.

Point of confluence

From Mr Andrew Semple

Sir, May I just correct one factual error in your news report, "Closed shop ultimatum", of Wednesday last (September 28)? The employers' side in the water industry comprises the 10 water authorities and the 28 statutory water companies. It will, from October I, be serviced by a single until set up for the purpose by the Water Anthorities' Association. But this particular piece of joint machinery does not mean that the association generally represents the association generally represents the companies as well as the water authorities; the Water Companies' Association is long established in its own right, and whilst we hope to develop close and friendly relations there are no plans for a merger, let alone a take-over! Yours faithfully. ANDREW SEMPLE, Secretary,

Water Authorities' Association, I Queen Arme's Gate, SWI. September 30.

Straw burning

From Dr J.V. Loke

Sir, Your recent correspondence has illustrated the diversity of views that are beld on this subject, but the reasons for burning the five or six million tonnes per annum of straw surplus to present requirements in the United Kingdom have not been clearly described.

Speechless

From Mr Ronald Clough

Sir, I never thought any person or persons would cause me sufficient indignation as to be moved to write to the correspondence column of a newspaper. The Yorkshire County Cricket Club Committee have proved me wrong. Now, having taken up the pen, I find I am still speechless, or whatever the written equivalent is! Yours faithfully

Prime Minister and the Tory future

From Lord Alport

Sir. Mr Julian Critchley, by his rather crude personal attack on Mrs Thatcher in his Type, Tees interview (report. October 3), will have detracted from the significance of the point he was attempting to make - that many Conservatives feel deep eoncern at recent developments in the Prime Minister's style of leadership and policies.

No one doubts the Prime Minister's sincerity, her courage or her patriotism, but many of us are appalled by the narrow confermity which she demands, and appears to get, from those whom she has associated with her at Westminster and in Whitehall; by her seeming lack of magnanimin, - which Burke one said was "not seldom the truest wisdom in politics" - in dealing with her opponents both a; home and abroad, by her apparent vindictiveness to those who disagree with ber and by what seems to be a lack of sympathy for those for whom the welfare state, created by all parties during this century, provides almost their only prospect of security and bope.

characteristically robust Нст dismissal of criticism levelled at her by her political opponents shows that, if she is going to change her style, criticism must come from within the ranks of the Prime Minister's own party. I: would be tragic if, after so much success in reducing inflation, curbing the irresponsibility of certain elements in the national and local leadership of organized labour, and encouraging the development of enterprise in industry, the style of her leadership and increasing disenchantment with her personality were, not only to bring ultimate humiliation for Mrs Thatcher, but caused the hreak-up of

King Leopold at war

From Lord Keyes

Sir, As the author of a biography of the King which includes the first-hand testimony of my father. Admiral of the Fleet Lord Keyes, Churchill's special liaison officer with the King in 1940, I must express my appreciation of your admirably fair and balanced obituary (September 27) of King Leopold.

I was glad it pointed out that there was no truth in the French Premier's (Reynaud's) accusation that Leopold had failed to warn his Allies of the surrender of his Army. I was also pleased that it referred to the lecture in which Liddell Hart claimed that the BEF was "saved by King Leopold, who was then violently abused in Britain and France".

These facts are of crucial historical importance, because all the bad press and most of the misfortunes suffered by the King after he ordered the ceasefire on May 28, 1940 (two days after the BEF had begun its Dunkirk evacuation, without informing the Belgians and French), are directly stributable to one man are directly attributable to one man. Indeed the King and his troops were being acclaimed as heroes until Reynaud made them the reviled scapegoats for the defeat of France - and of the BEF.

My father, who was at the King's side througout the fierce and costly battles fought hy bis Army to cover the BEF's advance into Belgium and departure from the battlefield via Dunkirk, and had kept Churchill fully informed thereon, was aghast when Churchill, under intense pressure from the French, echoed, in the Commons, Reynaud's baseless denigration of the King and his Army, for whom he had so recently expressed his "great admiration" and asked that they should "sacrifice themselves for us".

Despite the Government's attempts to muzzle him, Keyes devoted the rest of his life to refuting the lies about Leopold which proliferated as a result of Reynand's character assassination of the King. Yours faithfully,

Pulpit politics

From Mr Michael Harward

Sir, There is a complete - and short - refutation of Mr Scruton's arguments I"The pestilence of pulpit politics." September 27) penned long ago. It may be found in Matthew, ch 25, v 31 and onwards, especially verses 44 and 45.

One might also note that present Western governments are, of course, not atheistic: among their pantheon have been Nike, Poseidon, Thor.

in the autumn rather than in the spring with a corresponding unprovement in productivity; disease and weed control are claimed as additional advantages.

Many farmers burn before ploughing, but in recent years new techniques have, on suitable soils, eliminated the need for ploughing, so decreasing the number of costly time and energy-consuming tillage operations and allowing winter cereals to be sown under optimum condinions. These techniques conserve the natural structure and fertility of the soil and are referred to in many countries as "conservation tillage". Suraw and stubble left on the surface impair these simplified tillage techniques and provide shelter for large numbers of slugs. If incorported near seed, straw may release toxins that inhibit growth of the seedlings. A vigorous programme of re-search to solve these problems is in progress at institutes of the Agricultural Research Service. In particular, the Agricultural Research Council Letcombe Laboratory is taking a lead in studying practical alternauves to burning in arable farming, using funds provided by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries tiated by history.

Scholastic standards

From the General Secretary of the National Union of Teachers Sir. Those who are familiar with the views of Professor Anthony Flew will not be too surprised by his letter education. It is simply untrue to say that comprehensive education was "forced through". Its acceptance was very broadly based and continues to be so. Certainly I have yet to hear any demand for the return of secondary modern-type schools, which is the logical consequence of a

of September 29 on comprehensive returo to selective education. Professor Flew criticises comprehensive schools on the grounds of their alleged examination failures. Good education is much more than that which can be measured by examination passes. But if that is the ground he chooses to argue upon, he must yield in the face of the Government's own published stat-

The latest published figures from the Department of Education and nce reveal that the proportion of children leaving schools with either O or A level passes rose from 40 per cent to 50 per cent between 1972 and 1981. Over the same period, the proportion leaving school with no qualifications at all fell from 46 per cent to 12 per cent.

Rather than accept these figures, Professor Flew chooses to pin his arguments on the now discredited findings of the National Council for Educational Standards' recent report, Stondards in English Schools. This "study" has been censured by statisticians, educational researchers and, it is now reported, hy Sir Keith Joseph's own senior civil servants.

Finally, Professor Flew should stop repeating the old myth that the National Union of Teachers opposes the disclosure of examination results. What the NUT does oppose - and with Professor Flew's letter as evidence is elearly right to oppose - is the mischievous use of such information to draw unjustified conclusions.

Yours faithfully FRED JARVIS, General Secretary, National Union of Teachers, Hamilton House, Mabledon Place, WC1.

Vulcan, Zeus - strange gods for Christians to go a-whoring after As for "trumpeung abroad their virtuous concern for peace and social justice", this must be more of a painful duty than a pleasure for any priest: here it only attracts ridicule and perhaps loss of preferment: elsewhere, and by no means exclusively in the "East", it may attract extreme personal danger. and Food, the Department of Education and Science, and the European Community.

The most cost-effective ways of incorporating straw into the soil are being investigated, and microbiological techniques are also being studied for converting it into a fertile compost that might be returned to the field. The problems are complex and call for basic research as well as its application, hut if they can be solved then farmers will have the opportunity to benefit from straw instead of dissipating it to the atmosphere to the annoyance and possible hazard of the public.

There is also a need for more research on diminishing the surplus hy using the straw for other purposes, such as energy production and papermaking. However, the presence of lorries carrying six million tonnes of straw on narrow country roads for several months might be more objectionable than burning. Yours faithfully,

J. V. LAKE, Director, Letcombe Laboratory, Agricultural Research Council, Vantage, Oxon.

Value judgments for Hoskyns file

From the Chairman of The Green

Sir. Your leader. "The Hoskyns file" (September 30), is to be welcomed, if only for drawing a line under the election, even before the party conferences close the season.

Sir John's lecture was evidence that thought is now to be allowed to return (the headline in your same issue. "Bank doubts Lawson's elaim that economic recovery will last". was another straw in the wind!.

The only pity is that so facile a diagnosis as the "failure of nerve of an inbred political establishment should have occupied the stage. Your leader rightly exposed its simpleness. You did so, however, only by extrapolating the argument, saying that it was less the manda-rin's club than the selection process of politicians themselves, and particularly prime ministers, that was in question – they being the necessary fount of fresh thought.

The timebombs under our society, however, as cited by Sir John the job culture, urban dereliction, centralised welfarism, etc. all the disjointures, indeed, of a person and his planet - are endemie in the assumptions of our Government. How shall we ever get fresh thinking. matching to our situation. from any prime minister whose cast of mind is necessarily adapted to those processes and their institutions?

Fresh thinking surely, is only likely to come from a questioning of Sir John Hoskyns's (and your) premise: that to drop out of the industrialised world - i.e., to forswear growth would be a catastrophe.

Might it not be better first to ask whether industry is not bringing the world itself to catastrophe; to ask whether we are putting back what we take out of it, and whether we are not continuously and in every way making it uglier? One wonders, where did Athens in her time stand in any industrial league table. It is our values, in other words, we should be examining in this short hreathing space: and those values include the knowledge we use to master the world, rather than to belong in it. Assuredly, the only

Church strategy

From the Reverend Gilbert Russell Sir, Your Religious Affairs Correspondent summarizes (September 231 two recent reports on patteros of ministry. In one of them Canon Tiller proposes that "the pro-fessional diocesan clergy" (presum-ably those trained in theological colleges) shall work not in the parishes but as a group of "consult-ants" (the word he himself used in a radio interview). Who is to consult them and about what? The Church is already cumbered with a large body of "expens", from whose offices pours a stream of leaflets and booklets on a host of subjects, most of them quite remote from the needs of parishes struggling to stay in husiness, and to meet the huge increases in the diocesan quota from which the 'experts' are paid. More important still - what sort of men are going to seek ordination, to spend 40 years at an office desk, waiting to be "consulted":

Canon Tiller is also, rightly, concerned about the use of church buildings. It is "verging on blas-phemy", he affirms, to spend hundreds of thousands of pounds repairing a church in an area of social deprivation". Thus if York Minster, say, were on Merseyside, it would be wrong to maintain it; but since it is by the Ouse, repair is permissible. And if "social deprivation" is to be the criterion, the people of Bexhill and Bournemouth bave leave to refurbish their churches without any qualms of conscience. This may sound frivolous; but the logic is Canon Tiller's.

New patterns of pastoral work, new policies about buildings, are indeed required. But it seems a pity that the Advisory Council for the Church's Ministry should, on both subjects, espouse such elitist views a "professional" clergy with the rank of consultants, and privileged populations with the right to maintain their churches in the accustomed style. Yours faithfully, GILBERT RUSSELL,

Mr Justice Woolf, sitting in the Queen's Bench Division, granted an application for judicial review brought by Mr Martin Ward against the London Borough of Hammersmith and Fulham quashing its decision to close the Westway travellers site.

Mr John Laws for the secretary of state: Mr Alexander Irvine, QC and Mr Alan Wilkie for the London Borough of Hammersmith and Borough of Hammersmith and Fulham; Mr Roger Gray, QC and Mr Oliver Wise for the Royal Borough of Kensington and Chelsea; Mr Derek Wood, QC and Mr David, Halpern for the GLC, Mr Stephen Sedley, QC and Mr David Altaras for the applicant.

MR JUSTICE WOOLF said that the applicant was o gypsy within the meaning of the Caravan Sites Act 1968. He had brought the application against the two borough councils because he was o ficensee of the Westway travellers site, which was inoutly provided by the travellers. was jointly provided by the two boroughs but which the boroughs were now proposing to close.

The proceedings included the secretary of state because be had power to direct local authorities to provide sites under the Act, and the GLC had also been represented because they owned the site in question.

Gypsies had been resorting to the area of the boroughs for some time, and in 1975 the borough councils had decided to provide the Westway site jointly. The site was leased for seven years to the London Borough of Hammersmith and Pulham by the GLC. By a separate agreement made on April 15, 1976, the boroughs had agreed to share the costs of providing adequate facilities for gypsy accommodation.

Despite considerable expenditure, however, the site was far from desirable, and there was considerable.

borough for use as a travellers site" and "to hand back the site to the GLC" in June 1983.

A letter from the borough to the GLC dated May 5, 1983 made it clear that while it would not evict the gypsies, the borough no longer was prepared to be responsible for the site. The GLC having also felt unable to take responsibility, the applicant by letter dated May 12, 1983 had asked the accretury of some to intervene under section 9 of the 1968 Act.

After representations had been made, the secretary of state concluded on June 24, 1983, that of evicing the gypties he did not consider there to be any urgent need to use his powers under section 9, but that he would keep the situation under review. On the evidence it appeared to his Lordship that there was a real danger of services being cut off. The applicant had forestalled that by applying for judicial review.

What the applicant sought now was, inter alia, orders of certiorari quashing both the decision of the secretary of state not to exercise his powers under section 9, and the two resolutions of the borough of Hammersmith in respect of the site, and orders of mandamus both directing the secretary of state to direct the boroughs to provide a site, and directing the boroughs to discharge their duties under section 6 of the Act. The MASTER OF THE ROLLS

Where a bill of lading stipolated that "all conditions" of the charterparty were deemed to be incorporated upon the performance of which the cargo was to be delivered, it did not refer to the arbitration clause in the charterparty which, accordingly, was not incorporated into the oil of lading. The Court of Appeal so held in diamissing an appeal by consigners, Petrofina SA, from a decision of Mr Justice Hobboose who had refused to stay an action by shipowners, Skips A/S Nordheim.

The evidence showed that when the borough of Hammersmith took the decision to cesse to provide the site, it had not appreciated the true mature of the decision or its consequences. The decision ought to be quashed so that the mature could be reconsidered in the proper manner having regard to the fact that section 6 required the borough to provide accommodation for gypties residing in its area prespective of whether or not the secretary of state had exercised his discretion under section 9 to give directions.

Fauther relief would be inapproappeared that there was no right of redress available in the courts to the individual gypsy. But on examination of the judgment it was clear that it dealt with the question whether or not an individual gypsy had a personal right which he could enforce in the courts and was not dealing with applications pursuant to public law under Order 33 of the Rules of the Supreme Court.

It did not seem to his Lordship.

Further relief would be inappropriate, so an order of certorari would be granted in respect of the committee resolutions of November 3, 1982, and April 27, 1983, Since the decision of the borough of Hammersmith had been reached in collaboration with that of Kennington and Cheisea, the same conclusion applied, but no specific relief having been sought, none would be granted. > Io the Astro Valiente case Mr Justice Staughton referred to the variety of incorporating words which had been judicially considered over the past 90 years or more and said: "If one looks at the cases, it appears to depend on whether the words of incorporation whether the words of incorporation used are "conditions", "terms", "clauses" or "exceptions", or any combination of the four; and perhaps on whether such words are used in conjunction with the participial phrase "he or they paying freight as per charterparty."

He continued: "Such nice He continued: "Such mice distinctions are in my judgment not wholly appropriate to a commercial relationship, and should if possible be avoided. So too should the interpretation of an ordinary English word 'conditions' in a sense different from that which it naturally bears, particularly in a document which may well not be prepared by a lawyer, or at any rate prepared by a lawyer, or at any rate by an English lawyer." In principle, his Lordship had sympathy with that view, but that was a corner of the law where commercial customers attached supreme importance to certainty and where particular phrases had established meanings and effects. It was not the policy of the law to change them even if, in the absence of precedent, there would be a case for so doing.

The consignee submitted that the phrase "all conditions and exceptions... including the negligence clause" were very wide words of incorporation and were all embracing. Accordingly, they entitled the court to incorporate the whole charterparty into the bill of lading Roche & Temperley.

First, an arbitration clause was not an "exception". They must therefore rely upon the words "all conditions" as words of incorpor-ation. Second, "conditions" in the context of incorporating charterpar-ty provisions into a bill of lading contract had been the subject of considerable judicial consideration and the conclusions reached, unless shable, fully supported the judge's decision.

His Lordship regarded the decision of the House of Lords in T. W. Thomas & Co Ltd v Partsea Steamship Co Ltd ([1912] AC 1) as clear outhority for the construction of the word "conditions" simplicities. There was no trace of that decision ever having been doubted or modified and that decision was in his Lordship's judgment fatal to the present appeal.

Mr Justice Staughton in the Astro Vallente case wished the word to receive its ordinary interpretation but "conditions" was a chameleon-like word which took its meaning like word which took its meaning from its surroundings. In the context of incorporating into a bill of lading contract provisions which found their birth in a charterparty, his Lordship would have thought that the ordinary English meaning of the word was "the conditions under which the goods are loaded, stowed, kept, cared for, carried and discharged". An arbitration clause was not in that category.

In his Lordship's judgment the arbitration clause was never incor-

Shares of Harold Ingram, the knitted garments group, made a long awaited return to the stock market yesterday following publication of the official offer document from Wasskon Investments - the people behind this year's meteoric rise in Bellair Cosmetics from 12p to over 600p. Back in August, Mr Mehment Tecimer and Mr Yalcin A. Akcay, the Turkish businessman behind Wasskon, bought a 52.6 per cent stake in Ingram at 65p a share and reassured the remaining sharholders they would be bidding a similar amount for the rest.

amount for the rest.

But yesterday shares of Ingram were requoted at 312p, and at one stage touched more than 400p a share, before closing at 310p.

At this level the group, which returned to the black earlier this year after three years of losses, was valued at an amazing £10.3m.

£10.3m. Last night the Ingram board said the Wasskou offer was a matter of formality and urged waskon's track record since it bought its stake in Bellair gives little indication of why it

Efficiency dilutes the growth tonic

Government ministers have leapt with some relish upon newly revised figures for growth in the British economy which appear to suggest that industry, far from crawling, has been positively bounding out of

Mr Nigel Lawson, the Chancellor, told ministers and bankers at last week's meeg of the International Monetary Fund Washington that British economy ad been expanding at a rae of 2½ to 3 per cent a year since 1981, which "compares favourably with our long run pre-recession trend."

This is true enough if we take the inflation-blighted post-oil shock 1970s as the point of comparision. It is worth reminding ourselves, however, that during the 1950s and 1960s Britain consistently achieved growth rates of more than 3 per cent a year, and even then lagged well behind her European partners, not to mention Japan.

If growth has been so good, moreover, why has the impact on unemployment not been greater? The conventional rule of thumb has been that economic expansion of about 21/2 per cent a year would be enough to halt the rise in jobless while growth of more than that would reduce it.

Yet the first signs that the johless tide might be on the turn have come only in the last few months, at a time when - comparing the first half of the year with the second half of last - the economy was speeding ahead at 4.5 per cent on an

Sterling Guarantee Trust spent This spring, for the first £2.5m acquiring just over a million shares in P & O. That time in four years, the number of new jobs outweighed - by a tiny margin of about 25,000 - the number of jobs lost.

The increase must be igger than this to translate into a fall in unemployment. The labour force is still growing and many people available for work are not included in the official jobless count.

But ministers, clearly confident that recovery will be sustained well into next year, will be hoping that more jobs are on the way. Experience since the upturn began in 1981 is not very reassuring, however. New calculations by Dr Bill-Robinson of the London Business School suggest that almost all the extra growth "discovered" by the latest revisions is accounted for by North Sea oil activity, which has now been given more weight in national output statistics. But the North Sea sector provides relatively few jobs. The rest of the economy and especially manufacturing - has been growing as sluggishly as we had thought, hence the poor response of employment to seemingly rapid growth.

The response has been worsened by the marked improvement in ductivity in manufacturing industry which has managed to increase output while shedding labour. The Bank of England said last week that this improvement could well be sustained in the foreseeable future, which is good news for the long run future of the economy but bad for the 3 million-plus unemployed Employment in services

It is an uncomfortable thought for the government that even if it succeeds in creating rapid sustained; growth by the time of the next election the number of jobless could be far higher than today:

By Our Energy Correspondent Australia is being urged to open its oil exploration industry to overseas companies and ease

the tax burden on oil finds. The call by the Australian Petroleum Exploration Association, is accompanied by a warning that the country's demand for oil will double by the end of this centry.

The association says that in order to find enough oil more than 2,000 extra wells will have to be drilled in the next 15 vears. Only 689 exploration wells have been drilled in Australia in the last 10 years.

Exploration drilling is declining because of low oil prices and undertainty over government axation policy. In addition, the association says, the Australian companies involved are having difficulty raising capital because of nigh interest rates.

It says that vast areas of Australia are completely unested, although it bas identified on areas where the geology indicates that oil could be reveal much to shareholders ahout the performance of key subsidiaries, preferring often to submerge the individual con-cerns in the aggregate results. But Consocidated Gold Fields has promised to publisb an annual review of Amey Roadstone Corporation, and the step is to be welcomed.

The policy is not entirely sefless. Amey is so important to ConsGold that wags bave suggested the parent might better be called Consolidated Grit or even - a reference to Amey's reclamation of gravel pits - Consolidated Green pits Fields.

Amey's 1983 operating profits of £46.7m were a third of the total earned by ConsGold and while the parent's fortunes have fluctuated Amey's profits have risen relentlessly.

By far the most important part of Amey's business is humble aggregates. In the year to the end of June turnover in aggregates rose by 23 per cent to £279m, where it accounts for more than half of total sales.

Moreover, operating profits from Aggregates rose 44 per cent to £33,4m, or almost threequarters of profits.

COMPANY NEWS IN BRIEF

Perhaps the best feature of the ARC annual review is its forecast, best in the senses that the forecast sounds good for sharebolders and is unusual. Apart from coated stone overall demand is expected to rise by 3-4 reserves of stone and gravel.

Amey complains that the cost of obtaining new reserves is "exorbitant" and that prices are too low to yield an adequate return. But it is precisely the competition for reserves which imported into the South-east.

has pushed up prices. And last year the return of capital employed in the aggregates division rose from 22.8 per cent to 27.7 per cent, while the return for Amcy as a whole went up from 15.8 per cent to 18.3 per cent. Plenty of companies would be grateful for such profitable subsidiaries.

Intl Thomson Organisation

It was no surprise that the placing of £45m worht of new shares in International Thomson Organisation yesterday did not pass off with the ease that would normally be afforded an issue being handled by the august combination of S. G. Warburg and Cazenove.

The problems arose because the Thomson family plans to place today the first tranche of an equal amount of its holding existing shares in Canada. If the woold placing is successfully when gravel will have to be from 82 per cent to 73 per cent the family holding in the Canadian publishing, travel and oil group.

> There is bound to be considerable short-term indigrestion of the stock, not helped by market suspicions that the Canadians, who have never been strong holders of Thom-son shares, will leak their £45m tranche back on to the London

Market men were talking of the shares - already down 26p to 696p yesterday - slipping back through the 650p placing price and the Thomson family experiencing difficulty in getting the second half of its £45m sale in Canada away successfully.

There are also fears that Thomson will splash the new money and more on buying more United States technical publishing houses, though nothng immediate appears to be on the cards. These businesses do not come cheap, but the group's ambitions are known to lie in this direction.

It is unfortunate that the primary aim of the placings - to increase the marketability of the shares and the number in public hands - may significantly harm the share price. But all the factors that bave driven the price up from 405p this year good growth in nearly all its husinesses - still apply.

Plan for survival by Texaco chief

By David Young. Energy Correspondent

Petrol retailer' profit margins have been reduced to nil in many areas and the business needs to adopt a four-point policy if it is to succeed, according to Mr John Ambler, chairman and chief executive of Texaco yesterday.

Texaco has agreed in principle to add the marketing operations of Chevron to its retailing business in six Euro-pean countries and Mr Ambler said in London that Europe, as the world's second most important petrol market could become profitable for the multinational companies.

In Britain, the big three petrol suppliers Esso. Shell and BP, are using all their marketing expertise to remain in profit while small petrol stations continue to close at the rate of 2.000 a year. The last 10 years have been traumatic for oil companies in Europe, said Mr Ambler. The industry has had to come to term with price instability and elasticity of demand due to prices and competition from other fuels.

To ensure success, oil companies would bave to:-Develop management skills. Be flexible and willing to tackle new problems and oppor-roleum Review, the Institute of Petroleum's journal, Mr R. E. Lintott, marketing director of Esso, said: I think it is quite right that governments like Britain's have decided that they should have local crude responses should have local crude production priced at world marker levels. It is very important we stay with the concept because in effect, that is what the oil is worth. There is no reason why we, or anybody else, should sell it for less.

Albert Martin hit by British results

Disappointingly low margins in Britain cut half-year profits of Albert Martin, the Notting-bam textile manufacturer, despite a strong performance from its Far East factories.

But the dividend has been maintained and Mr Michael Kidd, the chairman, is standing by Martin's promise made at May's share placing, to pay at least 2p for the year, in spite of osses at bome. Marks and Spencer takes about 30 per cent of turnover, all of it produced in Britain, but it is clear this business is barely

Demand for all the group's products, from nightdresses to knitwear, is strong, but the British operations are unlikely to be in the black by the year

Mr Kidd said that he hoped the present level of demand would be transformed into British profits in 1984. The biggest problem is the knitwear division, but the introduction of high-technology, computer-controlled machinery should improve efficiency. Despite the much better profitability of the overseas operations, British production is unlikely to be moved abroad, Marks and Spencer would not remain such a big customer, while the knirwear benefits from the "Made in Britain" label in export markets.

RESULTS OF THE FIRST HALF YEAR 1983

At its meeting on 23 September 1983 the Board examined the company's results as at 30 June 1983. The results are as follows: 30.6.81 30.6.82 30.6.83

911,368 1,070,648 Turnover before tax Trading profit 7.682 70,302 Net profit 11,767 23,613 Compared with the previous year the reduction in the trading profit at 30.6.1983 is due to: taking into account extraordinary costs caused by the early retirement of 140 employees (8 millions); the increase in appropriation to depreciation, which is due to the substantial investment effort undertaken during the first half of the year and which will continue until the end of the year. This appropriation amounts to 72.4 millions as opposed to 52.3 at 30.6.1982.

The net profit has improved considerably. However, it. must be remembered that the results for 1982 were affected by the reorganisational costs of the American subsidiary. The cash flow is improved from 49.3 millions to 91.3 millions which means an increase of 85%.

Time to resurrect the fight for tax reform reform suddenly scooted down the priority list once the wealthy had received their cut in the top rates. That is a pity.

The idea that lower tax rates would spur people on to greater effort by increasing incentives may have proved to be no more than a slogan. But aside from that ideological gloss, the cut in top rates was a great success and a blueprint for the future.

Quite apart from the justice of the matter - 83 per cent imposts are oppressive by most standards - top managers generally felt much because of the windfall to their living standards and wasted far less time on tax avoidance, greatly to the benefit of British industry.

Now the calls for reform are beginning to surface again, most notably in the Meacher report on poverty, prepared for the House of Commons Treasury Committee, but originally huried by the election.

thoughtful economic adviser to Lloyds Bank, has also joined the battle to work out longterm reforms, saddy removed from the realm of immediate action by the extended computerization programme of the Inland Revenue. The many must ever live by a more restricted code than the few, so, unfortunately, there is no chance of most people or even the poor receiving the same comforting boost to net income enjoyed by the

But the cut in top rates still suggests an overriding aim for reform: to cut the effective marginal rate of tax as low as

There has already been a reasonable shift from direct to indirect texation. So reform must rest on cutting the total tax burden, which rose to a peak of 40 per cent of national output last year, or on redistributing the total, a zero sum in which there must be as many individual losses as

Dramatic cuts in the tax burden could be achieved only by unravelling the welfare state or big cuts in unemploy-ment, the most practical, if difficult, policy aim. Cutting memployment to one million would, other things being equal, silow the standard rate of income tax to be cut from 30p to 20p.

Otherwise, we must rely on obbing Peter and Paul to pay The main thrust of the new calls for reform is, according to your jargon, to ease the poverty trap or raise incentives at the lower end of the scale which in any language means bringing ingether the social security and taxation systems in such a way that the marginal rates of tax, necessarily high as benefits are withdrawn in line with rising income, are kept to the minimum and certainly below 100 per cent, which despite some advances is still not always the case. An important part of any such scheme is to remove the anomaly of employee National Insurance contributions, which effectively raise the standard rate of income tax to 39p in the pound for most people and are so cavalierly unrelated to tax thresholds that, as Mr Johnson points out, the overall marginal tax rate oddly falls for those earning between about £12,000 and £17,000 a

Mrs Thatcher is keen on seeing National Insurance contributions as just such, rather than a tax. This convenient upsurge of bypothecation - the idea that taxes are specific to certain expenditures - is against the professed Treasury philosophy and a perfect excuse for those who try to withhold taxes for defence spending or insist on money from motor raxation being spent on motorways. It

A starting point of tax at 39 per cent need not, however, spoil the game. The recent Inland Revenue recalculation of the tax cost of pension reliefs at £5.1 billion this year. against the previous 1982-83 estimate of £1.1 billion, means that this and the gradual phasing out of other reliefs soch as mortgage interest (£2.15 billion), life insurance and self-employed pension relief (another £1 billion) would tot up to around £10 billion or 10p on the standard

Any wider reorganization of tax and benefits would tin-doubtedly swallow up the larger personal allowances. Even so, at least on a crude arithmetic basis, it is clear that a combined income tax and social security tax could eventually be pitched at 20p in the pound if special reliefs were phased out and unem-ployment reduced to 1 million.

recent survey by Richard Ellis. The agent says that 1.300,000 so it of space is under construction with 1984 finishing dates - of that space year, 240,000 sq ft is pre-let. Hi So far new space for 1985 anals about 750,000 sq ft hut this is likely to increasess additional developments are started. Richard Elits's survey shows that the West End market has now moved into a new cycle and is set to improve. The unusual inactivity in autumn 1981 and spring 1982 preceded an upturn in the market. Now only 6 per cent of the 80 million sq ft of space in the area is available. According to the agents demand is strongest for prime, new property.

This is a new trend and suggests that second-hand and older property is overhanging the market with the take up of space in new schemes increasing steadily during 1982 to total 1.200.000 sq ft. Only 350,000 sq ft of second hand property was let during the second half of last year "mostly in very small units". According to the survey the owners of this secondary space need to make the property more attractive by taking account of tenants' specific requirements. The agents suggest adapting traditional finance and leasing arrangements and shorter leases for second hand properties.

Availability of space varies cross the six West End areas. "While less than 250,000 sq ft is on the market in St James, around 1,250,000 is now available in the northern district and 1,500,000 in Victoria." Both the North London and Victoria areas have been affected by big firms moving out and second hand space now dominates the market. About 500,000 sq ft is available at present in the Covent Garden/Strand area.

Rental growth in Mayfair has been gradual with the best accommodation fetching £20 a sq ft against around £18 a so ft three years ago. In Victoria rental growth has been spasmodie while in the northern districts rents have remained static over the last three years. To rents in the northern area are about £16 per sq ft in Baker

Richard Ellis expects rent increases to be greatest in St James where levels have grown y a fifth to £22 per sq ft since 1980 and in Covent Garden where rents have grown from £8 per sq to £1g per sq ft since 1976.

The four year slowdown in building society braneb expansion could be at an end five of the top 16 societies planning more openings. In 1982 the rate of hranch expansion by the building societies continued to slow with the opening of a total of 318 new branches, the smallest increase since 1976.

The Aromatic underworld

Palmer the old matador takes the bull by the horns

By John Hennessy Golf Correspondent

If there is such a thing as a dream ticket in golf (whatever it may mean in politics) it must surely be on display at Wentworth today, when Arnold Palmer and Severiano Ballesteros set in motion the twentieth world match-play championship, sponsored by Suntory. The hero of yesteryear, virtually the inspiration of modern golf after the war, pitted against the young conquistador, who has become the No I draw card in the world, is a promoter's dream. As for the ticket, you need to move fast to get a toe hold at Wentworth over the next four days.

To mark a special occasion, wrongly described as the twentieth birthday since the first tournament was played 19 years ago, the promoters extended the field from 12 to 16 and invited back all 12 previous winners. Jack Nicklaus kept Suntory on tenterhooks, rather like a Prime Minister taunting the electorate about a general election date, before declaring himself unavailable with the result that five more players were needed.

The choice fell upon the two leading British golfers, Nick Faldo and Sandy Lvie, together with Bernhard Langer, of West Germany, Tsuneyuki Nakajima, of Japan, and Calvin Pete, of the United States. Tom Watson, alas, had aiready committed himself elsewhere.

The top match did not come about by accident, for Palmer let it be known for a variety of reasons, he would be keen to take on Ballesteros, the holder, in the first round. His pride would not suffer from a defeat in such circumstances, given the 28 years that separate their hirth dates (1929 and 1957) and Ballesteros's towering reputation in the game today.

Against almost every other player in the field a defeat would be something of a come-down for Palmer. Furthermore. Palmer genuinely believes he has a chance against Ballesteros, particularly over 18 holes, the test offered by the first round. Think what a coup that would be. Later rounds, in accordance with the Wentworth format, will be over 36 holes. Palmer cannot have bargained for the fact that his opponent might not be at his best, for the Spaniard had to withdraw from yesterday's pro-am and take to his bed with a touch of influenza. He is prone to catching colds, but we have become accustomed to his appearing the next day and slaughtering everyone in sight.

Otherwise the portents are ominous for Palmer since Ballesteros is in huoyant mood after his victory in Paris last week, or at least he was before the bug bit. On Tuesday, after 11 holes of conventional practice, he took up a wager struck with his caddy, Peter Coleman, a few weeks ago and beat him on one leg for the next two holes demanding payment on the spot. On one leg he was only a few yards shorter off the tee. Reverting to his normal stance, he missed the green at the short thirteenth and elicited an original example of caddie wisdom. "You're using too many legs, Sancho Panza," counselled his lord and

The inaugural tournament was won by Palmer at the, then, tender age of 35. He repeated that victory two years later but Gary Player intervened and, by winning on four subsequent occasions, he stands at the pinnacle of the match-play summit.

But Ballesteros has won it these last two years and at 26 he will clearly have may more opportunites and the chance, therefore, to dislodge Player. Nobody among present day players is better suited temperamentally to match-play golf. National pride and personal aggrandisement combine to produce a formidable competitor when the going is toughtest. His hammer thrust last year across the swampland that had earlier been the first green to frustrate a tenacious Lyle at the first extra hole was perfectly in character. Earlier, Lyle had shown remarkable fortitude in his turn in recovering from six

Faldo, however, has had a much better season than Lyle this year, indeed than any other European player if you disregard Ballesteros's exploits in the United States. Faldo brings up the tail of the field against Graham Marsh, winner in 1977. Lyle plays Greg Norman, another Australian, whose year was 1980.

Lyle and Faldo are in different halves of the draw. For Lyle to reach the final he would have to beat, after Norman, probably Nakajima (against whom Peete may lack sufficient length) and then Ballesteros or Langer. Supposing Faldo gets past Marsh, his dsubsequent opponent may be Hale Irwin and Isao Aoki. Both British players have a burning ambition to put the memory of last year behind them. The total prize fund is £120,000, ranging from £35,000 for the winner to £5,000 to the first round losers. First round draw 9.15: S Ballesteros (Sp) v A Palmer (US) 9.30: T Weiskopf (US) v B Langer (WG) 9.45: G Norman (Aus) v S Lyle (GB) 1.0: T Nakajima (Jap) v C Peete (US)

In a week when Colin Snape, of the PGA, has announced that the women professionals will next year be playing for at least £225,000, much interest will inevitably attach to scores from the 54hole WPGA event which starts today at

All the leading players are in the field, with Muriel Thomson determined to edge further ahead of her colleagues in the order of merit. At the moment, Miss Thomson has, 1,101 points and £8,350 to Dale Reid's 1,001 points and £7,493.

With only four tournaments remaining on this season's calendar, it seems unlikely that there will be any immediate response to Snape's call for more top amateurs to turn professional.

Other leading amateurs have been freely discussing the professional game, hut many of them resent the way in which this year's WPGA tour has operated.
Amateur entries in WPGA events have

The British figure skating and ice dance championships this year are to be underwritten by Tuborg Lager (John Hennessy writes). The figure skating events are to be held at Solihull on November 2 and 3 and the ice dance event, featuring the world champions, Jayne Torvill and Christopher Dean, will be staged at Nottingham on November 18, The arrival of Tuborg whose total sponsoring of the sport over the next three years will be £25,000, must have been greeted with a sigh of relief by the National Skating Association, Last year they relied on a few company for support which qualifying round and Uxhridge, 4-1 conquerors of doughty Chalfont St Peter, were now faced with a fgar more worrying Simpson, half of the Galton proposition: Hampton, tough boys from the banks of the and Simpson writing team, got involved in the great non-League underworld by accident. Thames, who stood a division higher in the Isthmian League He left it too late to get to a League game one Saturday and ended up at Hampton for his weekly fix fo football. "They and fourth in the table, to boot. Furthermore, Hampton have a claim to immortality in the annals of the FA Cup. True, they have never passed beyond the fourth qualifying round but the last time they fell at fence were asking for donations of a fiver each for floodlights, so I chipped in. A few weeks later they asked me to be president. I number four Alan Cooling earned himself and his club thought that would mean turning up to the odd annual dinner. But I've been with them their place in cup history. Cooling it was who scored a Hampton goal in their 2-1 defeat by Barnet, and Cooling, home and away ever since."

That was 1967 and the continual sense of involvement has kept him faithful to the cosa nostra of non-League ever since. Tom Barnard, Uxbridge's chairman, goes along with the godfather virtues by prizing loyalty as non-League's most important quality. "We've had four managers in the 21 years I've been with the club and not one of them has been sacked."

"And there's always the remote chance," mused Mr Simpson, "that you make the third round. I still remember that time in 1949 when Walthamstow Avenue went to Old Trafford and drew 1-1 with Manchester United . . . Jim Lewis hit the post in the last second, too. The replay was at Highbury and Walthamstow

But dreaming time was over. It was time either to lean against the fence or to pay an extra 20p and sit in the stand, as dream of getting to the first the players left the embroround proper and having a crack at a League side like Brentford." the players left the embrocation-scented dressing room and the rest of us left the lagerscented bar and battle com-

Uxbridge worked with a will but preferred to put their chances high or wide. Hampton were less impressive but more effective. Tim Hollands rose to an airy cross, felt the tout pans through his quiff and Hampton were 1-0 up. "We'll give him the goal," the Hampton manager, Charland, said. "He an airy cross, felt the ball pass doesn't score that many." Ron Clack, the Uxbridge manager, added: "If he'd got hold of it properly, I'd have backed our keeper to have saved it."

On such things do matches turn. Uxbridge played some pretty one-touch stuff and in the last minute, still striving for the goal Duff hit the post and Lattimer's wallop from the rebound was cleared off the line. The whistle blew and Hampton were marking and Hampton were marching on to face the winners of the game between Slough and Whyto-

Slough, of the Isthmiza league premier division, and Whyteleafe, mere Athenian Leaguers. The news came out that Leafe had done the business with a 1-0 victory. Shock and jubilation about the men of Hampton: "I always said Slough hate small grounds." Especially with that slope at Whyteleafe". The road to the fourth qualifying round

Alas, the wicket messenger had garbled it. The true result was as form suggested: 5-0 to Slough. Hampton and I face a visit to the Slough fortress in the FA Cup third qualifying round on October 15, knowing that we face a far harder task there than we would have done on the beginner's ski slope of Whyteleafe.

There are consolations for both sides: Uxbridge can try to work out their defeat on Tansley in the FA Vase; and as for Hampton, as they rub on their embrocation and prepare to face the mighty men of Slough, they can always point to each other that at the end of the day, the Cup is a great leveller...

RUGBY UNION: ASIANS ARRIVE FOR THREE-MATCH TOUR OF WALES

THE TIMES THURSDAY OCTOBER 6 1983 FOOTBALL: ENGLAND'S PROBLEMS INCREASE FOR THE GAME WALES DON'T NEED

Woodcock's injury leaves Robson short of forwards forward, is out of the England squad for next Wednesday's European Championship game io Hungary.

Woodcock did not come out for the second half of Tuesday's 1-I Milk Cup draw against Plymouth Argyle, after a recurrence of the hamstring injury which made him doobtful for the match in the first place. He missed Arsenal's two previous matches after picking up the injury just over a fortnight ago while training with the England party in preparation for their vital Wemhley international against Denmark.

Terry Neill, the Arsenal manager, said: "I have just spoken to Bobby Robson and told him that Tony is not fit enough for the England party. it's much too early to say how long he will be ont for and we will have a look at the situation tomorrow

The England manager has also received news from Italy that Trevor Francis is a doubtful starter after dislocating a shoulder last weekend. Robson said: "The position now is that I will definitely need to call up another striker. I haven't done anything yet about a replacement but as the under-21 squad will already be out there, I will probably promote either Paul will probably promote either Paul Walsh or Brian Stein of Luton and perhaps draft Portsmouth's Mark Hateley into the under-21s."

Robson has also put Viv Anderson of Nottingham Forest on stand-by should Mike Duxbury be ruled out tomorrow. A final decision on the fitness of the Manchester United right back will be delayed until today. Duxbury did not train yesterday and the United physiotherapist Jim McGregor said: "If we had to make the decision today be could out play."

Ros. Atkinson the United

Roo Atkinson, the United manager, said: "We shall leave it for 24 hours. I will ring Bobby Robson in the morning to let him know one Another England defender, Derek

United's record profit

Manchester United will report a record overall profit of £636,339 for the year ending May 31, 1983 at their annual shareholders meeting on October 27, In 1982 United had a most least 615,232,007, at the part of the profit of the part a record loss of £2,282,007, although £2m of that was accounted for by transfer fees.

Salary details show three employees, presumably the manager, Ron Alkinson, the chef executive Martin Edwards and the captain Bryao Robson, were in the £65,000 to £90,000 a year bracket and that the players carned between £25,000

Eddie McCreadie has resigned as ceneral manager of the Major Indoor Soccer League side, Cleavland Force. McCreadie, aged 42, coached the club for three seasons before becoming seneral manager. before becoming general manager last year. The team's executive vicepresident, Scott. Wolstein; said McCreadie's resignation surprise, "We had a good relation-ship over the years", be said.

Robert Prytz of Rangers is one of four foreign players chosen for Swedeo's European Championship squad for the match with Italy at Naples on Saturday October 15.

HORSE OF THE YEAR SHOW

Transition is too difficult for all but Sutton

Paul Sutton, from Cheshire gold medal winner, Iain as the easy winner of yester- Morgan, on Dun Topper, found was the easy winner of yesterday afternoon'e Whitbread Young Riders championship of the year, riding Miss Tina Rose's eight-year Diamond T.

Sutton, who was last year's leading junior rider, was the first of only two to go clear out The other nne was Philip Heffer, a member of this year's junior team, on Valley Dew but he knocked two fences down in the jump-off which meant that Sutton, whn had qualified nn less than four horses for the event, only had to dn a slow clear round in order to win. The young rider, who spent six months last year with Stephen Hadley, made nn mistake. It was a disappointing finish for Heffer, who has now finished second in this class for three successive years.

Yesterday's championship showed just hnw hard the transition is froto riding in pony classes to senior classes. It was ont that Jnn Doney, the new course designer, for the Horse of the Year Show, had built an excessively difficult course, nor was the difficulty in the height of the fences, (4ft 6in to 4ft 9in). The problem lay more in the tight time allnwed (77 sec) which meant that riders had to push on in order to escape time faults. Few of them had the experience to make up time on the corners but tended instead to go too fast into the fences. Tim Davies from Sussex, had no jumping faults on Ceramic but collected half time fault to finish thirs. Amanda Gaskell on Go Metric and Talim Varteva-nian on Westbury Lad were similarly caught out by the time after clear rounds. The latter had threequarters of a time fault and the former had one fault, Even the new jumior individual Earlier in the afternoon the Radin Rentals two fence challenge ended in a joint win for Harvey Smith on Sanyo Galaxy, Nick Skelton nn Everest Carat and Austria's Thnmas Fruhmannon Bandit. Every competitor must jump in each round until they knock a fence down when they retire. The winning three all went on to a fifth round where each one knocked down the plank.

Geoff Glazzard, from Staffordshire, riding the Dutch-bred Apollo II, narrowly defeated Robert Smith on Team Sanyo's Shining Example to win the nsway Furniture Cup, the main event nn Tuesday night. The Belgian Eric Wauters, who came second in the Harris Carpet Stakes earlier in the evening, finished third on Carlsberg Dark.

Smith, the eighth to go, in the 14-horse jump-off, achieved the first clear round in a time of 30.95 sec. Wanters followed suit but in the slower time of 33.81 sec. Glazzard then took up the challenge and despite losing a stirrup completed a finely judged round to finish in 29.09

'Man against boy' in Davis victory

One of the pleasures of reporting a fine player with fighting qualities, snooker is a friendly chat with the players after a match. A welcome visitor to the press room on Tuesday night was the world champion, Steve Davis, who dropped in to discuss, among other things, his 5-0 victory over Mike Watterson in the Jameson International tournament a Newcestle. Davis, quoted at 11-8 on to win the title, was as relaxed in conversation as he was at the table.

"It would have been nice if I had been given a harder game, although 1 was happy with my concen-tration". Referring to Watterson, he top of the table, the general strategy said: "He can certainly play a lot better than he did". Kintbury stayed on bravely in the kmistury stayed on bravery in the closing stayes to get within a length and a half at the post, but it was then 12 lengths back to the third, Bean Boy, the 7-4 favourite, Richard Rowe deserved full marks for an enterprising ride on the winner, but the rest carned no credit for giving him so much rope.

The stewards accepted that almost all the beaten jockeys were under orders to ddrop their mounts in behind and so were in no hurry to go when the tapes rose. However the stewards saked the jockeys to consider what the public might think of their performance.

One man not complaining was the winning trainer, Peter Candell, whose mare has taken on such top hurdlers as Gaye Brief, Royal Vulcan and Sola Bula in the past. "It's a help when they give you a bit of a start." He said. "Monza may have one more race over hurdles ten to over fences, she's totally genuine but tends to go over the top after four races, so I can't afford to waste any more time and like to win her

Monze was Candell's first winner of the season. Another trainer to break the ice was Fred Winner, whose Young Dusky, ridden with typical style by Joohn Fumonne, mastered Captain Dawn on the flat in the Nailsworth Handicap Chase. Francome is now on the 23 mark, seven behind O'Neill, who drew a blank yesterday. CRICKET

Sarfraz banned for six months by Pakistan

Pakistan's cricket authorities have barred the opening bowler Sarfraz Nawaz from first-class cricket until neat April for criticizing them in public. A disciplinary tribunal of the board of cootrol for cricket in Pakistan (BCCP) ruled last night that Sarfraz's repeated criticisms of the BCCP president Nur Khan, and the selection are strong to the selection are strong to the selection are strong to the selection are selection. the selection committee grossly violated the board's code of conduct. He has 30 days to appeal against the decision.

The selectors passed over Sarfraz for the current tour of India after his earlier criticism of Khan, for which he was fined - Rs10,000 (about £500) - Sarfraz then publicly accused Khen, a retired Air Marshall, of instigating a coup against him because of personal grudges. The tribunal said: "We have decided that the ends of justice would be met by we nove decided that the ends of justice would be met by directing that Mr Sarfraz Nawaz shall be disqualified from playing first-class and Test cricket up to March 31, 1984."

warning to the leg spinner Abdul Qadir, who withdrew from the India tour after the BCCP turned down his demand for a loan to build a house. They said Qadir should keep the interests of cricket above his own in future.

In the tour itself India, who started the third and final Test in Nagpur yesterday with one of their batsman, Patl, 600 miles away in Bombay, reached 92 for two on a rainalfected first day. Play did not start until 50 minutes before tea, raising the prospect of a thirddraw in a series which has been plagued by bad weather. When play did start, Gavaskar batted enterprisingly and was 46 not out at the close, well on the way to reaching his twenty-ninth Test hundred equalling Sir Donald Bradman's record, India could not have Yorkshire lost another bats-man yesterday when Bill Athey man yesteroay when sai Armey signed a three-year contract with Gloucestershire. Athey has been capped three times by England and has played in one day internationals. "My career at Yorkshire had become static and I need a change," he said.

Athey joined Yorkshire in 1976 and was capped in 1980. He told Yorkshire he would be leaving some time ago but they tried to persuade him to stay after the discussion between their captain-manager, Ray Illingworth, and Geoffrey Boycott, which ended this week with the decision not to renew Boycott's contract.

Athey said in Bristol: "That decision made no difference to mine. I had made up my mind to change counties."

Sales and Marketing Appointments

Sales Professionals: Office & Small Systems...

It's a question worth considering if you're looking for even greater success-for a sales career that'll give you just that little bit more freedom to really express yourself.

Join our formidable team of technical and marketing professionals and you'll be involved in virtually all our current technology. And that includes our highly successful Personal Computer, Displaywriter, System/36 and System/38. The sort of contracts you'll bring together from such a range could be worth hundreds of thousands of pounds.

But you won't just be selling products. You'll be selling IBM. Our name. Our service. Our investments in the future.

In return for this commitment, we'll give you every opportunity to develop your career into management positions.

And as far as financial rewards are concerned, you can expect a salary and a wide range of benefits that will make it worth your while right from the start.

So, if it's between three and six years since you graduated, and you think you can tell us about office or small business systems, and indeed, about networking and integrated systems, then we would very much like to hear

The Times guide to career development

Looking in a new direction

One bonus of the recession is that people are thinking more seriously about their jobs, both in terms of their own performance and of job fulfil-meot. If either of these consistently falls short, the oext question must be: is one to the right job? If not, what should one be doing?

Rather than searching at random, it is worth considering career guidance. People who consult a reputable agency receive a complete profile of themselves, their work objectives, unrecognized strengths and weaknesses, skills, personality, the sort of impression they make.

Scientific tests, unrelated to exams, also reveal their abilities, motivations, preferences and aptitudes. which psychologists interpret to find the type of work and environment best suited to the client. This leads to practical advice about job possi-bilities, the type of organization they should apply to, training or retraining where necessary, and help with self-marketing and CVs.

Clients range from people returning from abroad or from the Armed Forces to civilian life to mothers returning to work, would-be chartered accountants forming part of the high failure rate, and staff worried by under-achieving.

Mismatch

But there are two main categories. First, men and women looking for a new direction because their job mismatches their ability or fails to meet their expectations: doctors, managers, barristers, a factory storeman, teachers who have become discouraged or are anxious to avoid a promotion that will take them into administration.

Second, those who are affected by the recession: unemployed gradu-ates, people having a career change forced on them through redundancy, or knowing their job is at risk because "Until oow, firms have been overmanned", says Mr George Summerfield, who started Career Analysis to 1965. "But companies can no longer carry passengers, and staff come to us when they see the writing on the wall. Rationalization is making them think about themselves, about work and opportunities."

Many who under-perform are in the wrong job, he finds - or to the right job but the wrong organization, or at the wrong level. He quotes two typical cases. One, an advertising man who lost his job at 43, was in the right job but was misplaced in the demanding world of an agency. A similar job in an institution was suggested and he is now doing well in a building society.

Performance and job fulfilment. Sally Watts suggests the recession has made us look more closely at the work we do with the prospect of managership. For a £90 to £120 fee, depending on age, clients have the services of a psychologist with good knowledge of the job scene and training programmes. Sychologists' references

The second man was 34 when his sales division made bim redundant. His tests showed his line to be service rather than sales; a complete change to hotel catering management was suggested and he was advised to apply to a small hotel group, where he was taken on as trainer assistant manager.

Before the recession the Vocational Guidance Association, which opened in 1954, mainly counselled school pupils. Today, with a team of work consultants and psychologists, they see men acid women of all ages. About helf are under 25 (sudests about helf are under 25). half are under 25 (students, young professionals, failed chartered accountants.)

The cost is £80 to £103, with a £25 surcharge for aptitude testing in the much sought computer field, and for counselling oo management careers. This particularly helps middle managers, who are out progressing to find their best area: persoonel, data processing, marketing, etc.

Says Mr John Lawrie, the director: People are unhappy if they are not putting enough into their work. We help them to find ways to alter their job and edd to their experience."

Where appropriate, VGA encourages clients to develop entrepreneurahip and be willing to take decisioos, risks, responsibility. But John Lawrie has some sympathy with the constraints of company men having to fit into a oiche within an hierarchy in a vast organization. "We advise trying smaller firms too: these provide more variety and experience. Or if you're a go-getter, join a moribund set-up and push into life", be says.

Growth areas

Both consultancies direct clients, where possible, towards the growth areas: technology, leisure, financial services, own small businesses -provided these match their interests and aptitudes. Similarly, although a complete change may be indicated, both seek ways in which clients can capitalize oo their training and Careful self-presentation is the key to redeploying redundant top execu-tives to their forces or fifties. Many speod several days a week et Forty-Plus Career Development Ceotres in Birmingham, Glasgow or London, as part of a redundancy package, to search and apply for jobs and, just as crucial, prepare for interviews.

Some refer themselves because, like the 58-year-old ex-managing director, their part-time job does not ad-equately top up their early retirement pension, or because they are no: achieving at work. These executives are in, or looking for, the top jobs, and the fee for those coming indepen-dently is from £2,000.

Ceotre members have mock toterviews, supervised by a psychologist using closed circuit TV; an office setting with reference library, newspapers, secretarial services, access to business cootacts and head hunters.

Changing course

Most want to continue the same career, others change course to run a charity, take on a franchise, start a business, perhaps with others they from health foods to consultancy.

Five mooths is the average search time and eventual success is the result of careful presentation. For example, woman of 50 looked so young she was advised to clip her photo to the front of her CV; a grey-haired man in his late fifties, who normally wore a grey suit, shirt, tie and steel spectacles, was advised before his interview to change his glasses and choose a different coloured shirt and rie.

different coloured shirt and ne. Managers have great difficulty marketing themselves. We help them to find direction and show them how to use their strengths, and how to prepare succinct, interesting CVs with a remark at the end calculated to lead to an interviews", says Mrs Pauline

Hyde, the founder. So reduodancy can be the first step towards more satisfying work, even to fulfilling a long held ambition.

Callaghan destroys hopes of unity

Continoed from page 1 the transport workers' officer who had earlier moved the unilateralist resolution.

He demanded: "Would he ever, when he was conducting his wage negotiations on behalf of the motor car workers, have gone ioto the negotiations and said: We will give up some of our cherished practices unconditionally?"

"Would he not have att-empted to get a price for them?" He then added firmly: "We ought to try to get a price from the Soviet Union."
Mr Healey commented: "I am confident that because Neil Kinnock and Roy Hattersley are determined that we should have a practical, intelligent policy which appeals 10 the British people, we shall have got this straight well before the next general election.

"But I am afraid there was never a chance of getting it straight at conference this week. "I want to put Polaris into the negotiations, but I agree very much with Mr Callaghan; that if you want to negotiate with the Russians about Polaris ynu do not tell them in advance of the negotiation that you are going to give it up whatever

Mr Healey later confirmed the rift between the leadership and the conference when he could not serve in a Labour Cahinet committed to the transport workers' resolution, and that it would be Mr Kinnock's aim to have unconditional nuclear unilateralism wiped out from party policy.

He said in a BBC radio World At One interview that

"the key to the problem" was held by the union conferences; the source of Labour's unilateralist block votes. In a further interview on ITN's Channel Four News he said: "The conference did, of course, vole both ways once again and that was damaging. I think, for everything which Neil Kinnock and Roy Hattersley want to achieve" want to achieve".

Mr Healey had carefully avoided any such blunt analysis of leadership intentions during the debate itself, but his broadcast gave notice that in spite of Mr Kinnock's public backing for unilateralism the new leader would do all in his power to revoke the unilateralist policy confirmed by the conference yesterday.

 The Labour Party yesterday banned Mr Gerry Adams, the Sinn Fein MP for West Belfast, from its conference

Nevertheless, the hard politi-cal reality in Poland will not be changed. Mr Walesa will not suddenly become a negotiating partner with the Government. But the legitimacy of a government that now ignores Mr Walesa or the workers movement that he represented has been thrown into question by the prize.

The government's tactics are likely to coatinue to be to isolate Mr Walesa from Polish workers by trying to discredity him in articles and television

A White House spokesman said the President was "grati-fied that Lech Walesa and all those in Poland who fought so long and hard for peaceful evolutionary change, including the right to form free trade unious, have been given the high recognition of winning the peace prize.

In Rome, the Pope greeted the award with "great satisfac-tion," Vatican sources said. Cardinal Jozef Glemp, the Polish Primate, said "Good, good" when he heard the news, as he was leaving a synod.

In Moscow, there was no immediate comment on the award. The Soviet Union has long dismissed the prize as an exercise in Western propa-

In reaching this decision the committee has taken into account Walesa's contribution, made with considerable per-sonal sacrifice, to ensure the workers' right to establish their own organizations.

This contribution is of vital importance in the wider cam-paign to secure the universal freedom to organize - a human right as defined by the United exists, in spite of unequal conditions, unconquered in all peoples of the world. The committee has on several occasions when award-ing the Peace Prize emphasized that a campaign for human rights is a campaign for peace. Furthermore, the committee believes that Walesa's attempt to find a peaceful solution to his country's problems will contribute to a relaxation of inter-wording and timing, Mr Kinnock is on the left's side on defence. If you are on the left having the leader on your side is no fun at all. So halfway through a conference week new amusements have to be found for you.

At teatime yesterday, they invited Mr Gerry Adams, the Sein Fein MP who was elected to Westminster at the last election but who declined to take his seat, to address a fringe meeting. In the morning, during the defence debate, they made clear their detestation of a man whom they regard as being associated with violence. Mr James Callaghan. They shouted at him on the subject of his attitude, particusubject of his attitude, particu-larly during the general elec-tion, to nuclear weapons.

At lunchtime they shouted at Lady Olga Maitland at a fringe meeting on nuclear weapons. By nightfall, for all we know, they were shouting at anyone who cared to be shouted at or at one another. shouted at or at one another

And anyone who wished to combine a defence issue with another favourite left-wing cause could read a leaflet being distributed in the streets by the Labour Campaign for Gay Rights, which contained the headline. Belgrano tacties for Homosexuals?"

This appeared to be arguing that the Tories were seeking to. hatred against homosexuals in hatred against homosexuais in the same way as, by sinking the Belgrano, they helped create an atmosphere of "inevitability" around the Falklands conflict. On the other hand, since the argu-ment was tortuous the leaflet may just have been a warning no sailors against cruising in that relatively small part of Brighton which is a Gay Exculsion Zone.

Eventually tired but happy, leftwingers could return to their lodgings at the end of a perfect day. It is the "hard left" of whom we speak. The "soft left" are now in charge of the party which of course makes them ex-officie the centre or indeed the extreme

If you do not understand the process by which this happens the inowledge cannot be acquired. It is a gift.

Mr Adams' meeting was organized by the Labour Committee for Ireland. It was preceded by a completely unnecessary press conference whose sole purpose was to cause a few extra lines of publicity. By attending one felt a little ashamed at being party to such a process.

On the other hand it was an event of sorts. One was faced with a dilemma. Go - but don't stay long. That seemed the answer. At the hired hall, there were a lot of youths and girls standing about - some scruffy, some rather chic, some looking rather surly and perhaps even a little nasty. Still, I suppose all that could also have been said of the press.

At the door it was made clear that there would have to be searches of bag, presumably in case there were any terrorists about. I resolved to make it clear that I would have no objection to searching any of these young people or indeed Mr Adams. But I had got it wrong. They were searching us. A piquant touch,

What to ask Mr Adams? Presumably he had years of experience of dealing effortlessly with fearless questioning about his precise attitude to violence. Someone put a fearless question fearless question on the subject. He answered it effortlessly. He was against violence as such, but though military acts against the British forces themselves guilty of violence of course, were justified.

Have you personally ever had knowledge of specific military acts by the Pro-visional IRA," I enquired to which he of course replied:
"No" "Why are you so ill informed." I asked. "I am no ill informed." he replied. It seemed likely that he and I would detest each other, and it was time to go.

Lady Olga provided a fresher memory. She addressed a meeting of her organization dedicated to Nato and what was until recently the defence policy of British political parties in Parliament. She was sincere and courteous and was congratulated from the audience by Lord Longford. For these reasons among others, it was difficult to concentrate on her amid the screams of female peace lovers. A whilf of class hand entered the room, accentuated hy the fact that she tends to pronounce Nato as Neat-o, as if it were a rather commercial bairspray. Long may this good woman's vowels, and her defence policy enrage the egalitarian party.

The papers

The Daily Mirror says that lunacy took over from logic and intensity replaced intelligence at the Labour Party Conference when the party readopted the defence policy which readopted the detence policy which more than any other cost it the last election. "Only the Labour Party could still put money on a horse after the race had been lost", it claims. "Those who booed Mr Callaghan yesterday were booing their own past. The policy he supported was Labour's policy for nearly 40 years. Britain cannot say it believes in Nato as a collective. believes in Nato as a collective deterrent against Russian attack and then deny Nato the weapons; the strategy and the bases to make that deterrent effective. Weaken the deterrent and the risk of war increase. That is a simple truth understood and accepted by every postwar Labour government, and by every minister who served in them including those now standing on their heads."

The Daily Stay calls Richard Noble's capture of the world land speed record "a stunning achieve-ment. It is an all-British achievement, it is an an-initial active-ment, from the venerable Rolls-Royce engine to the scores of firms who subsidized his frightening machine. Richard Noble has fulfilled a nine-year dream. He did it, he says, simply because he wanted Britain to have the record all possible reasons. The Daily Star salutes him". The paper also "salutes" Lech Walesa, who has "salutes" Lech Walesa, who has been awarded the 1983 Nobel Peace Prize. It says: "The decision of the Nobel judges will anger and embarass Poland's military pupper masters. So much the better. Walesa, a simple, good and immunensely brave man, has amply carned his award".
